A PRINCE'S REAL LOVE ROMANCE

Not Even the Commands of An Emperor and Two Queens Could Keep His Highness, Prince Elerweiss From Marrying His Humble Little Dutch Village Sweetheart.

A Prince's Love Letters.

"A TRUE soldier obeys his King, who is the father of his interests." So was the Kaiser's curt message when he learned that Prince Elerweiss was head over heels in love with the pretty daughter of the Burgomaster of Leyden, Holland.

Prince Elerweiss, prime favorite with the German Emperor, expecting soon to realize his ambition to become the young est general in the German army, read his sovereign's message, and sat down and wrote to his pretty little Dutch sweetheart.

"Beautiful Friends, I will not give you up—I will not give you up!"

Nor did he give her up—and the story story makes one of the sweetest romances in which a real Prince has figured as hero in a long time. He is indeed a hero, for not only did he brave his Emperor's wrath, but what else of his rank, the Queen-Mother of the Netherlands, in clinging fast to the simple Dutch maiden who had won his love.

The Prince's fidelity to his humble love is all the more to his credit because he had not only gravely favored by the Kaiser, but also the young officer got at his fingers and a Queen—the German Empress and the Queen-Mother of the Netherlands. Each these royal ladies interested themselves in his career, were charmed with him, him about their respective courts, and were looking about them to find for him a suitably rich and royal bride.

Now, the Dutch city of Leyden is not far from The Hague, capital of the Netherlands and the seat of Queen Julia Wilhelmina's court. A year ago this last autumn Queen Wilhelmina's aunt, Princess Burgomaster Langefeld, of Leyden, organized a tennis tournament for the benefit of a certain charity.

Prince Elerweiss being widely known as a dashing player of that game, the Queen-Mother insisted that their relationship be changed to that of comrades, and the Princess should find their relationship to be the same.

"Come on Jan Pelder," said the Prince, "and be my best man."

It was a very good reception, graced by the presence of several other royal and noble personages from the capital. The country folk gathered from quite a distance—young men in rollicking short and ribbonwork wide trousers and wooden shoes, and Dutch maidens in their linen caps and the most extraordinary number of petticoats, one worn beneath the other, making funny little Dutch children, all starched and ironed for the affair, looking like animated tenpins.

Among the tennis contestants, chief of all—next to Prince Elerweiss—was the Burgomaster's charming daughter, Annetje Langsfeld, a fresh-faced little beauty with the deepest blue eyes and the most lovesome smile.

Of course Annetje and the Prince played "partners" in the "doubles" in which they figured. And from the moment they first clasped hands across the net it was a certainty that he would not be content allowed to win any "singles" for which they were matched.

Even in their "doubles" little Annetje made the keenest strokes. The Prince was so entranced by her graceful movements that his eyes were hardly on the ball instead of on the back. But in claiming points for his side he was very careful.

Thirty, Love!" the Prince would cry as he scored a point, and then, turning to his partner with a smile:

"Twenty, Love!"—with the accent on "love"—and the Prince repeated it with a smile to Annetje's shell-like ear.

By the time the tournament was over the Prince was hopelessly in love—and so was little Annetje, under her reserved exterior her heart was all a-flutter.

Other German royal officials who were spectators of these scenes at first considered the Prince's attentions to Annetje merely a pastime and a Prince might be allowed to carry on with a pretty peasant girl, even with the daughter of a burgomaster. They did not then dream that Prince Elerweiss, favorite young officer of the Kaiser, could think seriously of a girl so far beneath him in station.

So, back at The Hague, they made merry over it. And when Queen Wilhelmina met Annetje Langsfeld, she kissed the girl and returned to her mother, the Burgomaster's wife, with the remark that Annetje was a "dear little thing."

Then the Prince Elerweiss got to neglecting the court ladies. They were learned, with the arrogance and pluck, how far was world-big his time to the pleasant environs of Leyden with little Annetje.

This was true. The Prince had lost all taste for court society. He loved to sit amid Dutch surroundings at the Burgomaster's house, where were hosted not the ordinary own pretty heads, and to drink home-brewed beer out of pewter mugs that would have made royal lips loathe.

Sometimes they would wander along the banks of a canal, where Annetje grew would grab at them. Further out in the country they sat on mossy banks and would lose deliberately in the shadow of a windmill watched only by curious geese.

Such a sweet, new day, was that at Prince Elerweiss's proposal of marriage to little Annetje.

Many as the girl was, she turned pale and wept.

"Beautiful, before Friendship" exclaimed the Prince, "what have I said to bring tears to those lovely eyes? Is it that you pity me that I am not free and—"

Then Annetje could only throw herself into his arms and sob out her whispers, when she had succeeded her emotions.

"Oh, my Prince! It is not proper to honor for the daughter of a burgomaster!"

"Then I am no longer a prince," answered, "there is no honor too great for you. You are a princess in my heart, and of the court ladies—they are not worthy to be called princesses you have no soul where I do not honor!"

And so Miss Annetje's fears were set at rest, and they delighted their truth, elated even at the speaking of the pomp that would dwell along the usual banks. It seemed to impulse what it was all about.

But in the meanwhile the Queen-Mother had learned how serious was the Prince's affair, and she reminded for his future, knowing the Kaiser's colonel thrills of dark brothers. In vain she implored her nephew to say good to to the burgomaster's daughter. Then she sent a stern Dutch officer with a personal message to Emperor Wilhelm II.

On the day that the messenger reached Potsdam and was admitted to the Kaiser's audience in the New Palais the Emperor was not in good humor. He was pacing excitedly, breaking off a conversation with the Empress to receive the officer in his army, and an account of peculiar weight, for when the verbal message of the Queen-Mother of the Netherlands was repeated to him he nearly had a fit.

"What! Prince Elerweiss!" gasped the Kaiser. "I order him to leave the girl and return at once!"

The Prince was with his pretty Annetje when the short, official-looking envelope was handed to him. Together they read the "Leave the girl and return at once," read the Kaiser's harsh command.

"What! Prince Elerweiss!" gasped the Kaiser. "I order him to leave the girl and return at once."

"Daily played tennis while cruel creditors carried off their furniture."

"Beautiful Friends:

"There is not one who sides with me and who has courage enough to urge that proud mine. I shall be with you as soon, and Prince, "and be my best man at the wedding."

Having thus gaily crossed the Rubicon, the Prince and his little beauty entered the royal coach and were driven through the city to the castle of Oud Wassenaar on the road between The Hague to Leyden, to the hope that the Prince's aunt, the Queen Mother of the Netherlands, who lived there, would receive him and his wife.

A Prince's Love Letters.

My Own Dear Annetje:

Just because I am following the dictates of my own love for you it seems that every one is fighting against me. If I could only look into your eyes now and feel your dear lips on mine I should be brave to the fight.

But do not fear, beloved. I am a true prince, and will not surrender my precious Annetje.

Your own,

ELERWEISS.

Beautiful Friendie:

Do not be alarmed at the message sent to me by my august master, the Emperor. I will not give you up—I will not give you up!

There is not one who sides with me and who has courage enough to urge that the Prince Elerweiss may be forced to forget and forsake those dear little eyes, those rosie cheeks, which have been the cause of our court. I shall be with you as soon, and then—let your heart tell you the rest.

ELERWEISS.

Prince Elerweiss kept true to his word. The doors of the court of Oud Wassenaar soon him. There resulted the news. He hied to with bold his rank, his prospects and the preparations for his marriage were on the usually excited Dutch. And these were conferred when on the morning of his depart- close by, might receive him and his wife.

Their "SIMPLE LIFE" HONEYMOON

Eloping With Only the Clothes On Their Backs, She "Made Up" as a Boy, and They Tramped Joyously—Until Real Tramps Took All Their Money; Then They Travelled, Half-Starved, in a Box Car and Ended Their Honeymoon in Jail.

"A man and what appeared to be a straight-limbed, lithe youth."

"One of them caught my arms from b shind and the otner two grasped Len. It was a perfectly awful time."

NOT in all history—until here and now—is there any account of a bride who began a honeymoon in a pair of her husband's trousers, continued it in a boy's disguise and ended it in jail.

Could any, save before has any disguise of these things happened to a girl who had eloped with her grandmother's knave.

Of course, the grandmamma of pretty Cynthia Moore was her step-grandmamma, and young and pretty herself, but still—

Miss Cynthia Moore—she's Mrs. Leonard Hart now—is the girl from Philadelphia to whom all these things happened. Cynthia's step-grandmamma lives in Pasadena, California, and is a widow. Not so very, for two months ago next Miss Caroline, Cynthia's step-grandmamma took a second husband, and he is the name of Louis Hart, Hart, Miss Caroline and Cynthia years older than Miss Caroline and five years older than step-grandmamma—had many acres of fruit trees and the things they grow out in California, and Miss Caroline—she's step-grandmamma—had so many more, and as they both were quite fond of each other it was nearly settled that they would get married just as soon as Mr. Hart could go home and—

Mr. Hart, who is a student of evolution, and a lover of Walt Whitmen, thought a bit.

"All right," he replied finally; "but let's have part of the honeymoon on the way."

"Where shall we go?" said the new Mrs. Hart. "All my clothes are in connection ours. You wouldn't care to go back and get them, would you?"

"Oh, no, no!" said Mr. Hart. "Besides, "Clothes aren't an essential."

"And I'd hate to ask step-grandmamma to send them to me," sensed Miss Caroline that just had been.

A fight of great inspiration beamed over Mr. Hart's face.

"I say, let's cross it," said he. "It will be great sport. No command, no—"

His bride looked down fondly upon the dainty French-heeled slippers and ruffles of assorted kinds.

Here there was a scream from the bride and protestations.

Nevertheless, that evening there strolled from Pasadena a man and what appeared to be a straight-limbed, lithe youth, face half hidden by a hat.

And how they tramped, and how they had to fib with real tramps, and how real tramps took from the betweenness a deal of money that it was scandalous for any tramp to have, and how the bride, Miss Caroline, rode once in a hay car, and how they were both finally gripped by a local constable, who wanted to drive a word they said and wouldn't telegraph to Pasadena, and how they were forced to jail—all of that is the story which the girl who eloped with grandmamma's husband's son during last autumn will tell and sent to Philadelphia to her mother when she said it was safe both parties to, write it all over again and she just couldn't have it, and how it all ended are the most affecting parts.

"Friend," I knew it was soon to be my step-grandmamma's husband's son, and grandmamma Leonard had told me of her plan. "Both was nothing else to do, and so "We" and "Us" and "Our" and "Ours" were the words we used. Then we got to the point where we had to tell each other our names, and we were quite at a loss. I had to think of a name for myself, and I thought of Len Leonard, and he said that wouldn't object to "Len" for him, and so we became Len and Len.

"Then we got to the point where we had to tell his story and ask them for money and tell them we were married. Then we got to the point where we had to tell them we were married. We

Who Is This International High Society Raffles?

The Same Fine Discriminating Hand Detected in Many Jewel Robberies in Fashionable Society at Home and Abroad.

The Lifting of the Ascot Cup, the Theft of Mrs. Ogden Goelet's Jewels and the Purloining of the Dayton Pearls.

THERE is a growing, haunting fear that a perfectly well-bred and accomplished "Mr. Raffles" is operating in the highest society.

He has an exquisite taste in diamond tiaras and gold cups. He only helps himself to the finest and most costly articles and disdains the ordinary run of silver spoons and jewelry that would make a common cracksman happy.

This "Mr. Raffles" carries on his nefarious operations in centres of wealth, luxury and fashion all over the world, but evidently he has strong American affiliations. He rarely executes his brilliant coups except at places where many Americans are present. Over in Europe they think he is an American, but perhaps that is only their way of paying a delicate compliment to us.

Is he an American or is he an Englishman, or is he, per...ps, the offspring of one of those famous Anglo-American alliances, combining the peculiarities of both races?

The situation is really a very serious one. Duchesses and fair members of the "400" are horrified to think that persons enjoying their intimate friendship are merely watching for an opportunity to steal their jewels.

Imagine the kind of scene that is taking place almost every evening in the most fashionable society. After a good dinner, helped along by choicest vintages, the possessor of untold wealth in jewels is enjoying a tete-a-tete with a distinguished, interesting, widely-traveled man of the world. She is quite carried away by his conversation. Suddenly she experiences a disagreeable sensation.

"How curiously the man is looking at my necklace," she says to herself. "Perhaps he is trying to make out how much it is worth. Can this be Mr. Raffles?"

When a woman has an intuition like this she may perhaps save her jewels, but more often she suspects nothing until they are stolen.

By many persons Mr. E. W. Hornung, the brilliant author of "The Amateur Cracksman," and other "Raffles" stories, is blamed for the creation of a number of amateur "Raffleses," who are now preying upon the wealthy classes of society. Mr. Hornung's "Raffles" is so charming, companionable and ingenious that he deprives crime of almost all its repulsiveness and makes it seem merely an exciting and agreeable vocation.

The latest operation of the international society "Raffles," the theft of the Ascot Gold Cup, bears an extraordinary resemblance to one of Mr. Hornung's most interesting stories, "A Jubilee Present," which relates the removal of a gold cup of great value from the British Museum by the brilliant amateur cracksman.

The Ascot race meeting is the most fashionable event of its kind in England, as everybody knows. The King and Queen always go there, together with all the aristocracy and fashionable society of England. There also you are sure to find all the wealthy Americans who are in English society or are trying to break in.

At the Ascot meeting just held the Duchess of Marlborough, the Duchess of Roxburghe, Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin, Mrs. McCreery, Mrs. Adair, Mrs. Anthony Drexel were among the many rich and fashionable Americans present.

The principal prize given at this meeting is known as the Ascot Gold Cup. It is one of the oldest racing trophies in England, having been given first in 1807. The other day it was reposing in state upon a table behind the grandstand. For nearly a century it has always been placed on exhibition there to be admired.

This episode happened two days before the race for the cup was to be run. The cup was in charge of two men employed by the jewellers who take care of it and also of one policeman. Another and very interesting race was being run and the King himself was sitting in the grandstand watching it. The two employes ran forward to a place where they could see the finish of the race. The policeman, as it became his official position, did not go so far away, but even he, a British policeman, turned his back for a moment on his precious charge.

In that one unguarded moment the gold cup was stolen. A few yards away there were scores of well-dressed men and women, nearly all of them persons of wealth and fashion. There were dukes and duchesses and American millionaires. Presumably it was not a duke or a millionaire who stole the cup, but if not it was certainly one of these perfectly dressed, distinguished gentlemen, looking every bit as good as a duke or a millionaire. Perhaps he had the cup, which is not a very large one, concealed in the tail, shiny hat, which every man of social position wears at Ascot.

Only persons of recognized position were present in the enclosure.

It was impossible to search the clothes of all the dukes and millionaires and, besides, it would have been unreasonable, for by the time the policeman had informed the authorities the thief had had plenty of time to move away.

The King himself was actually passing through the throng at the time the loss was discovered.

The social standing and savoir faire of the thief are indicated by his discrimination in choosing the Ascot Cup. There were other gold cups standing about it ,but of less value and historic interest.

"He must have been a blooming magician," said the unhappy policeman.

Perhaps the most remarkable of all recent society jewel robberies was that sustained by Mrs. Ogden Goelet, who as everybody knows is one of the richest women in the "400." She reported to the Newport police that jewels to the value of $200,000 had been stolen from Ochre Court, her summer home. Mrs. Goelet examined the servants at Ochre Court and then summoned the Pinkertons to take charge of the case.

A circular containing a complete list of the missing jewels was sent by the Pinkertons to chiefs of police all over the country. The identity of the owner of the jewels was withheld. The circular said the jewels were "missing," not stolen, and offered a reward of $10,000 for their recovery, without reference to the arrest or conviction of any person. The Pinkertons promised to pay any advances that might have been made by the pawnbrokers or others on the jewels.

An official in the Detective Bureau said: "Somebody familiar with Ochre Court comes pretty near knowing who took those jewels. For some reason the thief will never be arrested."

Mrs. Goelet told the detectives that she firmly believed in the innocence of her servants. She was then told that if the servants were innocent, some one of her numerous guests must have been a "Raffles."

About a month after the robbery Mrs. Goelet came to New York, where she was met by one of the young men who had been a guest at Ochre Court. They took a cab at the Fiftieth street entrance of the Buckingham Hotel and drove away.

An hour afterward Mrs. Goelet returned alone in the cab. It was then announced that she had found the missing jewels in the safe at her town house, No. 608 Fifth avenue.

But society began to ask if Mrs. Goelet had also found the thief; if so, why had he not been arrested? If the detectives had found a "Raffles," why had not Mrs. Goelet given her consent to his arrest? The strange recovery of the valuables created another nine days' wonder.

Mrs. Goelet explained that she mislaid the jewels and had forgotten their locality. Society was disposed to regard it as the strangest lapse of memory on record. The daring Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish expressed the general opinion when she said:

"Tut! tut! the jewels were not found in the way Mrs. Goelet said they were."

Can it be that the same skilled society "crook" who purloined Mrs. Goelet's diamonds has now lifted the Ascot Cup?

It may be recalled that the Duke of Manchester, whose doings interest Americans more than any other member of the British nobility, was once involved in a mysterious jewel case. Mrs. Joseph Lewis, better known in America as Fanny Ward, lost a case of jewels while on a visit to Mrs. Brown Potter, in her house at St. John's Wood, London. Soon after Mrs. Lewis left the young Duke and Duchess of Manchester arrived to dine with Mrs. Potter.

After a brief visit to Mrs. Potter, the Duke and his American bride went on to Tandragee Castle, the Duke's place in Ireland, for their honeymoon.

Then Mrs. Lewis began to make a great fuss about her diamonds, and to everybody's amazement, the Duke returned them from Ireland.

He explained that the Duchess's maid had picked them up at Mrs. Potter's house and accidentally packed them in the Manchester trunk.

Mrs. Lewis said she did not accuse the Duke of anything wrong, nor did she believe the maid stole the jewels, but she hinted mysteriously that a personage very prominent in society had something to do with their disappearance.

A regular "Mr. Raffles" was recently revealed in J. Edward Boeck. He was a man of education, family and social position. He was an intimate friend of Senator W. A. Clark, of the Guggenheims, the well-known family of mine owners, and of several famous millionaires. Boeck originally came into prominence when he attended Prince Pu Lun, the Chinese Commissioner to the St. Louis Exposition. China was then a great buyer of copper, and Boeck established intimate relations with the American consul magnates by obtaining business for them.

Recently Boeck made the acquaintance of E. W. Dayton, of New York, a dealer who owns a remarkable stock of precious stones. To show his standing, Boeck actually brought Senator Clark with him to look at the collection.

"Senator Clark," he said, "you ought to buy some of these pearls. You will not find any finer ones."

Boeck also introduced Dayton to Robert Guggenheim. Then he borrowed $10,000 worth of pearls from the dealer to sell to one of these millionaires and disappeared with his plunder.

It is reasonably suggested that some man like Boeck, with similar good manners, education and knowledge of precious stones and metals is committing a series of international robberies.

Modern Belshazzar's Feasts

Impious Banquets Where the Writing on the Wall Has Foretold Death and Disaster to American Spendthrifts.

BELSHAZZAR'S impious feast, recorded in the Bible, is perhaps the most dramatically tragic and impressive scene that ever happened.

But are not feasts of Belshazzar happening about us every day? We have had the Stanford White "girl-in-the-pie" dinner, the Thaw "beauty dinner," the James H. Hyde extravaganza, the Seeley dinner with "Little Egypt" as an attraction, the Corey-Gilman swimming bath banquet, and a Bonl de Castellane's fete to the King of Portugal, to mention only a few of the most conspicuously disastrous banquets of recent years.

These events have as a rule been marked by the same wicked extravagance, the same immunity, the same disregard of divine laws and morality as the feast which witnessed the terrible downfall of Belshazzar, the King of Babylon.

The modern occurrences have been followed by disasters corresponding to that which befell the King of Babylon, if we take into consideration the variation in surrounding conditions. They have been followed by death, murder, ruin and divorce.

The feast of Belshazzar is an eternally true warning to those who seek enjoyment in sensual luxury and insensate extravagance. The story of the Book of Daniel repeats itself whenever a misguided millionaire or spendthrift of to-day plans to amuse himself and his friends by an ingeniously sensual and grossly intemperate banquet. To these men who misuse money and opportunity, as to the ancient King who misused his royal power and office, the terrible sentence of the handwriting on the wall is directed:

The most spectacular American tragedy of recent years, the Thaw case, has its foundation in a series of Belshazzar's feasts. It was the notorious "girl-in-the-pie" dinner that made Stanford White celebrated as an organizer of such entertainments and marked his entrance upon the path that led to his shameful death. It was a dinner given to Evelyn Nesbit, which began the intimacy that was still more closely connected with his death. It was "the beauty dinner" given by Harry Thaw that revealed him as a young spendthrift millionaire, intoxicated with the sensual aspect of woman. It was a late champagne supper that began his acquaintance with Evelyn Nesbit.

Probably "the-girl-in-the-pie" dinner will live in history as the type of an insensate American orgy of the present era. It was given in the studio of James Lawrence Breese, the artistic society photographer.

The occasion was the tenth anniversary of the marriage of John Elliott Cowdin. Mrs. Cowdin was in Europe, but Mr. Henry W. Poor, believing the event should be commemorated, gave Mr. Cowdin a dinner, for which James L. Breese offered the freedom of his studio. The Breese studio, which is one of the finest in New York, is at No. 5 West Sixteenth street.

The banquet was drawing to a close, the midst of a table glistening with glass and silver a great tree was planted. It was a Summer Christmas tree. Its branches concealed jewels, priceless and exquisite. Each one was marked for a fair guest, not in prosaic letters, but most gracefully, most delicately. It was a feast of beauty, where beauty concealed beauty. Behind each picture was a diamond, a ruby, a pearl, selected by the host to fit the beauty for whom it was destined.

The roses that graced the banquet hall were like the beauties that vied with them. Each one was selected for a peculiar charm. Thousands that any belle would be glad to carry were discarded because in their very centres there may have been a hidden flaw, an irregular leaf.

The famous Restaurant Cubat, formerly the palace of the Countess de Pars, built for her by her admirer, Napoleon III., on the Champs Elysees, was transformed into a garden lighted with a glory of colored lights. Beneath them beauty dazzled.

No entertainment has ever led to such disturbances in the American business world as James Hazen Hyde's famous ball and dinner, patterned upon the fetes of the old French court. An enormous amount of money was spent, varying, according to differentsources of information, from $100,000 to $200,000.

It served the host's enemies as an excuse for making overt attacks upon him—the gossip grew and grew in proportion until his name became a by-word for all that was foolishly extravagant. The reports concerning his fete were in a way responsible for the investigation that was started in his insurance company almost immediately afterwards. They ended by upbraiding the man as almost criminal, one at whom men and women who had entrusted him with their investments looked with gathering rancor, until finally he was forced through the disclosures made to abandon his lucrative trust and flee to Paris, as the rink in East Fourteenth street, Manhattan, and has been arrested for allowing girls under sixteen to be there. His wife has obtained a divorce from him.

The entertainment which linked William Ellis Corey's fate to Mabelle Gilman may be aptly termed a Pittsburg Belshazzar's feast. Miss Gilman went to Pittsburg as the star in the comic opera "The Mocking Bird." The President of the United States Steel Trust went to see her on the first night and was smitten with her charms. He then planned a wonderful supper in her honor. It was held in the Pittsburg Natatorium, the principal swimming bath of the city. There were hot birds and cold bottles and whenever the guests felt overcome by the Summer heat or any other cause they took a swim.

Everybody knows that as a result of this feast Mr. Corey has discarded the wife of his youth, has estranged his own parents and has created unsettlement in the affairs of the greatest corporation in the world, over which he is supposed to preside.

Count Boni de Castellane gave a banquet to the King of Portugal which marked the climax of the frantic and wicked extravagance with which he squandered Anna Gould's millions.

At the very moment the Countess was saying farewell to the King she saw the Count engaged in a flagrant flirtation with one of the women guests. This goaded the Countess beyond endurance and led directly to the divorce which exposed the Count as the most contemptible little spendthrift and scoundrel disgracing modern society.

The recent gorgeous jewel banquet given by Howard Gould to twenty well-known actresses seems likely to be a rival to the Harry Thaw beauty dinner.

The jewel feature of the Gould banquet crowned the feast. After surprise had followed surprise in the form of the most startling effects that a New York chef could produce, and wines of almost priceless vintages had flowed as if they were the commonest champagnes, a unique covered piece of pastry was brought to the table. This followed the coffee and cigarettes for the women and cigars for the men. Mr. Gould, before whom it was set, lifted up its top. In a moment the brilliant lights of the banquet room were flashed back from the interior of the piece of pastry by a thousand jewelled facets. It was filled with jewelled favors which had cost a fortune—gemmed pins, la vallieres, jolly boxes, and a shower of sweet [illegible]

They carried baskets of roses and wore wreaths of rosebuds in their powdered coiffures. The men were in Pierrot costume. It was a picture set in rose bushes, all glowing with electric lights among the rosebuds. Following the debutantes' cotillon, came a professional ballet and a comedy acted by Madame Rejane and her company. The actress was brought into the room in a sedan chair supported by four court flunkeys and she was deposited at the feet of Mr. Hyde.

Trumpets sounded for the feast. The room was a Versailles garden with rustic chairs, arbors, rose-colored lights, trellises, vines and turf. The ceiling, as at Nero's feast, was hung with a canopy, and under its edges peeped rose bushes and greenery. Through the thousands of flowers showed electric lights, in all colors of the rainbow. Over each table a rose bush in full bloom reared its head.

The Seeley dinner at Sherry's shook two worlds—the world of society and the world of vaudeville, for they met there.

One grandson of P. T. Barnum gave the dinner to another grandson on the eve of the latter's wedding day, and the result made them worthy of the name of Barnum. There was never more talk about the Woolley House, the Siamese Twins or the Dip of Death than there was about that dinner, men. Mr. Gould, before whom it was set, for Captain Chapman, of the police, raided lifted up its top. BELSHAZZAR'S impious feast, recorded in the Bible, is perhaps the most dramatically tragic and impressive scene that ever happened.

But are not feasts of Belshazzar happening about us every day? We have had the Stanford White "girl-in-the-pie" dinner, the Thaw "beauty dinner," the James H. Hyde extravaganza, the Seeley dinner with "Little Egypt" as an attraction, the Corey-Gilman swimming bath banquet, and a Boni de Castellane's fete to the King of Portugal, to mention only a few of the most conspicuously disastrous banquets of recent years.

These events have as a rule been marked by the same wicked extravagance, the same immunity, the same disregard of divine laws and morality as the feast which witnessed the terrible downfall of Belshazzar, the King of Babylon.

The modern occurrences have been followed by disasters corresponding to that which befell the King of Babylon, if we take into consideration the variation in surrounding conditions. They have been followed by death, murder, ruin and divorce.

The feast of Belshazzar is an eternally true warning to those who seek enjoyment in sensual luxury and insensate extravagance. The story of the Book of Daniel repeats itself whenever a misguided millionaire or spendthrift of to-day plans to amuse himself and his friends by an ingeniously sensual and grossly intemperate banquet. To these men who misuse money and opportunity, as to the ancient King who misused his royal power and office, the terrible sentence of the handwriting on the wall is directed:

The most spectacular American tragedy of recent years, the Thaw case, has its foundation in a series of Belshazzar's feasts. It was the notorious "girl-in-the-pie" dinner that made Stanford White celebrated as an organizer of such entertainments and marked his entrance upon the path that led to his shameful death. It was a dinner given to Evelyn Nesbit, which began the intimacy that was still more closely connected with his death. It was "the beauty dinner" given by Harry Thaw that revealed him as a young spendthrift millionaire, intoxicated with the sensual aspect of woman. It was a late champagne supper that began his acquaintance with Evelyn Nesbit.

Probably "the-girl-in-the-pie" dinner will live in history as the type of an insensate American orgy of the present era. It was given in the studio of James Lawrence Breese, the artistic society photographer.

Brand New Things Science is Doing for Us

How Custom House Officers Look Through People With Their X-Ray Glasses to Find Smugglers.

THE Custom House officers of America are not only the keen-eyed watchdogs of the treasury, but they are the shrewdest pleasure jew. When passengers land at Ellis Island or Nevada and elsewhere the authorities must be sure to search them after they and through their corset stays, and, in fact, with the aid of the eyes, look through their clothes in search of concealed articles.

Those who have experimented this secret somewhat say it is a most strange and embarrassing sensation to have the X-rays penetrating the flesh and revealing the muscle of the American officers, and will probably be a matter of history within a year.

Of course only those who are suspected or to be examined are hastily glanced at by the inspectors, and those others, especially women inclined to be a little coy, full under suspicion regardless of innocence.

The apparatus is quite simple, and is used in such as is used in laboratories and by physicians to look on one side of the suspected smuggler while the inspector stands on the other.

To the naked eye no light is passing through the body, but the inspector holds before his face what is known as a fluoroscope screen. As the invisible rays brought back a pet dog, cat or bird with her through the body and through the flesh and bones the X-rays pass through the screen and the inspector sees the bones are silhouetted and other rays animals, yet invariably after reaching this country they are given up to their owners.

Even the inspector passes the screen up and down the body of the man or woman he is examining the silent purpose of the skeleton stand out black against a haze and horrid. The inspector watches for signs of jewels which the human, sinister and joyous of all the body are seen dimly.

The slightest outline of parts of the clothes is also visible. The steels in women's corsets, the buckles in suits of clothes, buttons, hairpins and eyeglasses appear black and electric ireland. Diamonds pretty themselves as more or less white, and the gold settings of these shines through the bone fastend into the stomach of the unfortunate smuggler. Coins and keys appear black as pistols in the creature, and he had lived just long enough to pass the contraband of the men, and here and there black the Custom House.

On this page is seen a reproduction of an X-ray photograph of a demure but slightly grave American woman who for some reason excited suspicion and was taken before the machine. She proved to be a walking jeweler's store.

The ingenuity of smugglers is almost beyond belief. Nobody knows how many are successfully carried into the United States alone.

But an idea of the need of such instruments may be had when it is recalled that a few years ago some $20,000 worth of diamonds were taken in California. A certain Hindoo known to be implicated, but was discharged for lack of evidence. Leaving India he went to Paris and to the custom-house all over the world were notified that he probably would attempt to land there.

The customs officers of Paris, knowing this, kept a sharp watch, but could not find him. Every article of clothing was searched, and his body and hair too, but without result. The search was found until the X-ray room was thought of for the first time.

As he took appeared a foreign body of small size which the inspectors were invisible to investigate. A surgeon was called in, but none of his instruments could locate or remove the mysterious body. As a last resort before giving him up the officers decided to attempt a little trick.

After consultation they announced that an article like would avail, it was necessary to cut the Hindoo's throat open and dig out the gems. The surgeon produced a number of razor-like knife and lay out an array of gruesome-looking instruments. To these were added a few small saws and chisels from the surgeon's chest.

The Hindoo watched proceedings with increasing emotion until the surgeon rolled up his sleeves and approached with an enormous leather knife. That was too much for the oriental's nerves. He begged for permission to produce the gems.

Then, to the amazement of the surgeon, he gulped, made a grimace, stuck in his fingers, they appeared, covered with mucous, on the tip of his tongue. A complete had been swallowed and the astounding fact that he had given no less than four pouches in his esophagus for the express purpose of hiding gems. He said it was not uncommon in India for criminals to form these pouches in the throats of their children.

The method is to tie a bullet and a bunch, hence the gems are thrown down the throat and let it stay in the esophagus, as it were, for days or even at a time.

The esophagus, as is well known, is a tube which performs the act of swallowing. It is a muscular tube, and when not in use is closed. The bullet, bursting between two of these rings, sets up an irritation at first, but after a time the tissue becomes accustomed to the presence of the bullet and it is not felt as an ordinary ball.

After the gems have been swallowed the adept can control the surrounding muscles so that he can give a small object, as in the present case, with his throat and cough it up at will.

Any resemblance on the part of frequent travellers to Europe in the cause of suspicion among the customs officers.

A young woman who had smuggled half a million dollars worth of diamonds into this country was caught at last because the authorities thought her pet animals did not live as long as they should.

She sailed several times a year for Europe and always returned with a pet dog, cat or bird with her. This made the mistress fond of the baby that she would take no other pet on a vacation. She went to Maine for the summer and then to Europe, returning the usual number of times with the usual number of pets.

But the police took charge of the last pet the baby loved, and the animal passed away in a yellow swirling mass of corruption.

A post-mortem showed that the creature's intestines were filled with jewelry above. Gems of all kinds! No American woman would be starting hoops, too.

Another famous criminal smuggler was warned as he landed at Ellis Island that the officials were suspicious and "suspicious" of his every movement.

Accordingly when his turn came to pass the inspector stood with his back to him, and as he turned over his baggage for examination he kept his eyes on the inspector's back. When the inspector would turn around to look at the baggage the smuggler would stop examining and look at the inspector's back. This little game was kept up until the smuggler was certain little tool pellets, and reluctantly he was marked with ominous numbers.

His first act was to find the mother and her baby and wrap rattles. "I'll give you a child," it says, "if you'll get me through the ordeal. I was bringing home for my little Johnny."

I had him down for the child. Just then I saw the inspector look from the mother and her baby down the steamship list. Then he looked at YOUTH, we are told, spells folly.

No, I suppose, we won't blame the young things too severely if they sometimes seem to wear the cap and bells a little obviously.

But really, between you and me, some of the school girls of one's acquaintance are too absurd. Their sense of their own importance is overpowering.

I heard a rather amusing story of one girl who is still in the schoolroom and whose mother we all know. She had a mild attack of measles and her one cry was, "Oh, doctor, save my beauty! Save my beauty."

What self-conscious things some of them are! But of course there are exceptions. Blanche Oelrichs, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. "Charlie" Oelrichs and a niece of the late Hermann Oelrichs, promises to be a great beauty, and yet she's not a bit spoilt.

She's only sixteen and charmingly pretty, with a mass of wavy black hair, which she usually wears flying loose over her shoulders. Such a contrast to her sister—Mrs. Peter D. Martin—blonde coloring! Just now Blanche Oelrichs is in Germany with her mother, visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Theodore A. Havemeyer, Sr.

She is quite an ardent tennis player, and had some rather well designed little tennis frocks, one of which you may see a sketch of here.

It was made of khaki-colored linen, the color which is having such a vogue in Paris and which a few wise ones were farsighted enough to order costumes of in advance on this side of the water.

It was a simple little frock, as was fitting for "sweet sixteen." The skirt, which was quite short and made without tuck or plait, had only a few uniquely applied bands of about one inch in width around the foot to relieve the plainness.

The waist had a comfortable looking turned-down collar, which gave the freedom of movement so necessary for tennis.

The waist had two deep scallops down the front, under which it closed invisibly. Edging the scallops were inch wide bands of the material. A deep plait on each shoulder near the sleeve gave a becoming fullness.

Cuffs, with applied bands echoing the bands on the skirt, ended a plain short waist sleeve just over the elbow.

And on the collar, the scallops down the front and the cuffs was the distinctive French embroidery of little flowers, and leaves done in white. It gave a coloring which was very effective and yet delicate.

The belt was a plain one of the khaki linen, and with this dress Blanche Oelrichs wore one of her favorite hats, with the brim turned back in front, and trimmed only with a ribbon bow.

Vernon H. Brown is very proud of his tall, good-looking daughters-in-law. And you can't blame him—can you?—when you consider how smart and well turned out they always are.

Mrs. S. Willard Brown was looking the smartest of the smart the other day when I saw her wearing a charming gown of pale blue linen. A most elaborate gown it was, too. No "sweet simplicity" about this!

Its only trimming was of fine white soutache braid, that ultra-smart adornment this year. It has almost entirely superseded French embroidery for anything but all-white goings, and it has a richness of effect which quite justifies it.

There was braiding on the little coat and on the deep cuffs, and most intricate and expensive braiding on the skirt.

The skirt was of walking length and had a plain front breadth, with stitched-down side plaits running from there around to the back. Down the outer edges of the front gore ran a line of soutache braid put on with a little quirl here and there.

Six large buttons of the pale blue linen embroidered in white ornamented the gore near the foot and were confined in lines of the braid. Starting on either side of this plain front width was the braiding, which ran all the way around the skirt. A line of narrow braiding outlined the hem.

Rather less body and more sleeves than we have been accustomed to see in smart coats this year characterized the little jacket.

It had a low, square-cut opening at the neck and was collarless. Lines of braiding and continuing to the cuff, gave a rather broadery was worn under the coat. A hat with the fashionable roll in front and trimmed with roses completed this very smart and trim-looking get up.

I had a look at a costume the other day which was a French model and undoubtedly unique, even if, personally, I couldn't commend it for beauty. It was. I was told, destined for wear by Mrs. D. Willis James, and it struck me as being one of the most pretentious linen gowns I had yet seen.

White linen and heavy Irish crochet lace were used exclusively in its construction.

A band of magnificent lace was put at the foot of the skirt, in a gale of wind I can quite imagine the effect being of an angry white hen, with all its feathers ruffled. As I said before, it was unique.

The little coat suggested a box coat in cut. But it had bands applied which simulated a bolero. It was made of linen folds, three overlapping. Indeed, the idea of these was carried out in skirt and coat and sleeves.

Wide bands of the same beautiful Irish lace as on the skirt were inserted down the coat and on the sleeves. Edging this on the coat were three folds which came down the front and ran around the bottom of the jacket. Three folds were used for the little simulated bolero and again three folds made capes over the tops of the sleeves.

The cuffs were wide turned-back ones and were made of three pieces. There was no collar to the coat and the opening at the neck was slight.

The hat to wear with this was trimmed with roses and had long floating streamers depending from the back.

We all cherish our own pet superstitions. At least I hope you have one. I certainly have—and get all manner of thrills and discomfort out of it.

Cholly jeers at me, but I notice he carefully avoids walking under a ladder or starting on a journey on a Friday.

But a good luck superstition we all hold is that of the horseshoe. I think that is what has made it so common. I had to have all the diamonds in my immense horseshoe set in another design. I really couldn't wear it after I saw one of my maids on her "afternoon out" wearing its exact duplicate in glittering glass. I have no doubt it cost her twenty-one cents.

But now I'm rather sorry that I did it. For the other evening at a dinner Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs was wearing a glittering diamond horseshoe on her black suede shoe. The shoe was tiny—you know she's famous for her small feet—the diamond horseshoe was very big and the effect was quite fascinating.

I suppose the vogue of very short skirts is responsible for our lively interest in clothing for our feet.

And how abnormally short the skirts are! Some time ago I told you that my tailor insisted on making my walking skirts four or five inches from the ground. At the time I protested, but now I see his wisdom. I should feel quite "dowdy" with my skirts any longer.

Whatever the "cons" of the case may be one of the "pros" is the excellent opportunity it gives us to exhibit to an admiring world the very newest and smartest things in shoes.

And such odd and original ideas are shown, too. Even quite conservative women have broken forth in unexpectedly giddy footgear. The woman who's season or two ago would have scorned the suggestion of garbing her feet in anything but sober black now has evolved in her bookcloset rows and rows of shoes and slippers rivalling in hue the colors of the rainbow.

For wearing with her walking togs she has trim shoes of russet leather, for the fashion of tan shoes has in no wise diminished. Even with black cloth gowns shoes of brown are the correct thing.

For golfing she has stoutly made oxfords, for tennis white buckskin with rubber soles. To accompany her light lisle gowns are a variety of white shoes. Pumps of buckskin, "sailor ties" of white linen, slippers of embroidered white linen with a tiny tongue and big mother-of-pearl buckle. Heavy, ribbed English pique made into pumps and adorned with a flat ribbon bow are considered very smart.

With her lingerie dresses, which she dons in the afternoon, are quite the "nuttiest" thing in shoes. They are made of very fine white kid—almost a pump in shape, and they boast a little turnover collar (I think that best describes it) of colored kid. Sometimes they are white with a coral pink collar, sometimes black, pastel leather, with a collar of violet kid, of course, the stockings must bear a hint of the same color. For instance, if the color on her shoes were pale blue her white silk stockings would probably be embroidered with a delicate design of forget-me-nots.

Stockings of plaid silk are going to be worn a lot. I've been quite original, I flatter myself, and have had some collars of silk of the same clan as my stockings put on my patent leather shoes. Don't you think it sounds chic?

But all the glories of the daytime footgear quite sink into insignificance beside the slippers designed for wear in the evening. Such darling and dainty things they are!

They are made of satin, plain and brocaded, of the finest soft suede, of velvet and of lace—yes, of lace!

Embroidery in gold and in silver is quite one of the finest effects. Even the bows are quite works of art, inset, as some of them are, with sparkling stones; some of them are studded with jewels, like the slippers of gold and silver cloth we saw in the Winter, in a bit too theatrical for the street.

But the height of luxury seems to me to be reached in the gaiters of lace which some women are ordering for wear with low white shoes.

They are made of a fine white lining, exactly the shape of the cloth gaiters we wear in the Winter. The lace, of course, is of a rather heavy kind, as very fine lace would crease and not set so well. They button with little pearl buttons, and of course are cut and fitted with the great est accuracy and care

How You Can Have a Gown Made While You Wait.

"WHAT a perfectly beautiful gown!" whispered one of New York's society matrons to another.

"When did you have it made?"

"This afternoon," replied her friend. "So glad you like it."

Did the admiring friend express astonishment at the information that this elaborate dinner gown had been made in an afternoon? Not a bit of it! "Making a gown while you wait" is so uncommon a thing among the "Four Hundred" in any big city.

Into a fashionable establishment just off Fifth avenue, in New York, hurried an elegantly gowned woman. In a moment she was consulting with Madame, the dressmaker. A dinner gown must be made to wear that night.

"Something in moonlight blue," suggested Madame, "and you might wear your turquoises and diamonds with it, or rose pearls, if you like."

"I'd like a long train and something fluffy on the bodice," interjected the customer.

"Yes, we'll make it of satin, veiled in chiffon and lace and embroidered with iridescent beads in shades of light blue just picked out with gold—yes, gold would be better at a dinner. It will impart more color to the gown. Leave it to me. I will get you up something charming. Let me see, canyon drop in about four o'clock—or, say five—or a fitting. Mrs. Blanke comes at four and Mrs. Vanderove at half after. I'll squeeze you in before the next fitter."

"And I must have it at seven o'clock sharp. Don't you think you can send it up before that?" cosingly.

"I'll try," smiled Madame, "but you shall have it by seven, anyhow."

With a wisp of moonlight blue material in her hand Madame trailed gracefully to her forewoman. "Make a dinner gown in this color," she ordered, and then she directed of what materials the gown was to be made, with a general direction as to its style.

The forewoman hurried to the workroom with the order and to the stockroom to see what she had of which to make it.

"This has got to be done by seven o'clock," she commanded. "Hurry now, and see where this goods can be matched. You must buy the lining and chiffon veiling of the same tint."

A young "shopper" hastened away with a bit of the moonlight blue, to search the shops for materials that matched it.

Before her shirts had whisked out of the door the forewoman was telephoning hurried orders to hand embroiderers and trimming makers with commands for one to come up and get a sample to match. When the prospective owner of the gown came to be fitted numberless workers were engaged in stitching upon her dress. Some worked upon one sleeve, some upon another. One decorated the decolletage of the bodice, as yet unfitted and undraped; others sewed bead after bead upon the gleaming folds of the filmy gown already glittering with points of iridescent light from applications of trimmings and embroidered arabesques of tiny beads. Still others worked upon the underslip and skirt. Just before 7 o'clock two busy packers laid the last fold of tissue paper between the diaphanous loveliness of an elaborately embroidered dinner gown, and a little later a maid was arranging its folds upon its owner.

Mrs. George Gould came sailing into one of New York's big dressmaking establishments not long since with an order for a velvet dinner gown to be worn with her magnificent emeralds.

"I suggest green velvet," said Madame, the dressmaker, "with a very simple bodice to act as a frame for the jewels. Your diamonds, with the emeralds, will give all the illumination required, and there should be nothing to detract from the beauty of the stones. Some embroidery upon the skirt? Well, perhaps a design in emerald and rhinestone beads running up the skirt and around the bottom. Just enough to relieve it, and quite a rich finish to the little sleeves."

"It must be ready in time for dinner before the opera," said Mrs. Gould. At the opera that night her superb gown of green velvet, with its rich embroideries and glittering emerald and diamond ornaments was the cynosure of all eyes.

Scarcely had she disappeared from the modiste's when a friend, who was due at the same dinner and opera party, dropped in for a gown.

"I'll wait for it," she calmly announced. "I'm tired and I'll just sit here and answer some notes while you make it. Call me when I'm to be fitted."

Into a cosy little room she was ushered, dummy does not answer for a modiste. Now she would write notes; then would where the gown is of the character known as "moulded to the figure."

In this case the fitter and his assistant promptly dropping in—then she concluded to pinned and draped and clipped, and in a look over samples of materials for another unusual the handsome gown was dress. After this more notes and then the fitter carried to the finishers, and soon the selection of a hat. And so she rested and dispatched to its owner.

What does it mean to make such a gown? It means that one bit of material is matched with lightning rapidity with linings, chiffon veilings, flouncings, with beads and sequins. That satin or cloth must have silk and chiffon to match it, and this is one of the most difficult things in the world, since in some shades a gown is seldom more than a matter of form. Indeed, gowns are often never fitted to anything but dummy figures where customers are away or do not want to be fitted either at their homes or at the dyed.

shops which they patronize. The average woman, however, is not then willing to be fitted, for she knows that little touches of originality can be imparted to the living figure which one might not think of in relation to a dummy. Sometimes, too, the season, but fastened to the skirt only at the upper edge. These bands were in- sewn.

The top of the skirt suggested an apron over midway around the skirt. Below the ties were three shaped bands of linen, each one being stitched at the top and bottom, but fastened to the skirt only at the upper edge. These bands were in- sewn.

White linen and heavy Irish crochet lace were used exclusively in its construction.

A band of magnificent lace was put at the foot of the skirt, in a gale of wind I can quite imagine the effect being of an angry white hen, with all its feathers ruffled. As I said before, it was unique.

The little coat suggested a box coat in cut. But it had bands applied which simulated a bolero. It was made of linen folds, three overlapping. Indeed, the idea of these was carried out in skirt and coat and sleeves.

Wide bands of the same beautiful Irish lace as on the skirt were inserted down the coat and on the sleeves. Edging this on the coat were three folds which came down the front and ran around the bottom of the jacket. Three folds were used for the little simulated bolero and again three folds made capes over the tops of the sleeves.

The cuffs were wide turned-back ones and were made of three pieces. There was no collar to the coat and the opening at the neck was slight.

The hat to wear with this was trimmed with roses and had long floating streamers depending from the back.

We all cherish our own pet superstitions. At least I hope you have one. I certainly have—and get all manner of thrills and discomfort out of it.

Cholly jeers at me, but I notice he carefully avoids walking under a ladder or starting on a journey on a Friday.

But a good luck superstition we all hold is that of the horseshoe. I think that is what has made it so common. I had to have all the diamonds in my immense horseshoe set in another design. I really couldn't wear it after I saw one of my maids on her "afternoon out" wearing its exact duplicate in glittering glass. I have no doubt it cost her twenty-one cents.

But now I'm rather sorry that I did it. For the other evening at a dinner Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs was wearing a glittering diamond horseshoe on her black suede shoe. The shoe was tiny—you know she's famous for her small feet—the diamond horseshoe was very big and the effect was quite fascinating.

I suppose the vogue of very short skirts is responsible for our lively interest in clothing for our feet.

And how abnormally short the skirts are! Some time ago I told you that my tailor insisted on making my walking skirts four or five inches from the ground. At the time I protested, but now I see his wisdom. I should feel quite "dowdy" with my skirts any longer.

Whatever the "cons" of the case may be one of the "pros" is the excellent opportunity it gives us to exhibit to an admiring world the very newest and smartest things in shoes.

And such odd and original ideas are shown, too. Even quite conservative women have broken forth in unexpectedly giddy footgear. The woman who's season or two ago would have scorned the suggestion of garbing her feet in anything but sober black now has evolved in her bookcloset rows and rows of shoes and slippers rivalling in hue the colors of the rainbow.

For wearing with her walking togs she has trim shoes of russet leather, for the fashion of tan shoes has in no wise diminished. Even with black cloth gowns shoes of brown are the correct thing.

For golfing she has stoutly made oxfords, for tennis white buckskin with rubber soles. To accompany her light lisle gowns are a variety of white shoes. Pumps of buckskin, "sailor ties" of white linen, slippers of embroidered white linen with a tiny tongue and big mother-of-pearl buckle. Heavy, ribbed English pique made into pumps and adorned with a flat ribbon bow are considered very smart.

With her lingerie dresses, which she dons in the afternoon, are quite the "nuttiest" thing in shoes. They are made of very fine white kid—almost a pump in shape, and they boast a little turnover collar (I think that best describes it) of colored kid. Sometimes they are white with a coral pink collar, sometimes black, pastel leather, with a collar of violet kid, of course, the stockings must bear a hint of the same color. For instance, if the color on her shoes were pale blue her white silk stockings would probably be embroidered with a delicate design of forget-me-nots.

Stockings of plaid silk are going to be worn a lot. I've been quite original, I flatter myself, and have had some collars of silk of the same clan as my stockings put on my patent leather shoes. Don't you think it sounds chic?

But all the glories of the daytime footgear quite sink into insignificance beside the slippers designed for wear in the evening. Such darling and dainty things they are!

They are made of satin, plain and brocaded, of the finest soft suede, of velvet and of lace—yes, of lace!

Embroidery in gold and in silver is quite one of the finest effects. Even the bows are quite works of art, inset, as some of them are, with sparkling stones; some of them are studded with jewels, like the slippers of gold and silver cloth we saw in the Winter, in a bit too theatrical for the street.

But the height of luxury seems to me to be reached in the gaiters of lace which some women are ordering for wear with low white shoes.

They are made of a fine white lining, exactly the shape of the cloth gaiters we wear in the Winter. The lace, of course, is of a rather heavy kind, as very fine lace would crease and not set so well. They button with little pearl buttons, and of course are cut and fitted with the great est accuracy and care

WHAT MAKES WOMEN TALK SO MUCH.

"Because a Man Uses as Much Strength in Arguing as if He Were Carrying a Saratoga Trunk, While a Woman's Effort Is Equivalent to Carrying a Small Satchel," Says Dr. Marage.

THE male sex has received with small enthusiasm the scientific explanation of why women talk more than men.

Dr. Marage, the great French voice specialist, proves that men don't talk as much simply because they can't.

They can't, according to Dr. Marage, not because their ideas give out, but because their vocal apparatus is more fitted for howls and shouts than for continuous talking. Woman gets in the last word in an argument for the same reason that the better man gets in the last blow in a fight after his adversary is all worn out.

The awful odds a man faces when he is drawn into an argument with his wife are pointed out by the French specialist, who has found out just how much energy it requires to talk. For instance

If an orator addresses a large meeting and does his best to be heard the exercise of driving the breath through his larynx and of making gestures is as wearing as if he were carrying an extra heavy trunk.

For a woman to say the same number of words in as loud a voice takes only the same exertion as she would make to carry a very light hand satchel. "No wonder," says Dr. Marage, "a man soon shows signs of irritation and impatience.

"After he has argued for a few minutes the trunk he may be considered as carrying becomes tiresome and he looks for the first opportunity to set it down. The woman on the other hand, being now thoroughly interested in the fray, does not feel the little satchel at all tiresome.

"She sees the signs of weakening in her adversary and gives him no chance to retreat with honor.

"As his trunk grows heavier and heavier he tries in desperation one move and then another to bring the argument to a speedy finish in his favor. If he cannot embarrass or confuse her into silence, he knows he is lost, and proceeds to get rid of his burden.

"With what dignity he can assume he puts on his hat and leaves, with some remark to the effect that it is hopeless to argue with a woman.

"He has the consolation of revenge, however, for in most households there are one or more individuals who can talk the women into silence as easily as they overcome him. Children have the same advantage over women that the latter have over men.

"This advantage is wholly a question of the size of the larynx or talking apparatus. In order to talk, one must drive air at considerable pressure past the vocal chords.

"Man, being built on an ampler plan and larger in most of his measurements, has a much bigger throat.

"If he sends the same amount of air through his lungs that a woman emits in ordinary speaking, the result would not so much as attract the attention of a mouse. He must drive four times as much air through his 'voice box' as she does in order to be heard at all. If he wishes to talk as loud as she, he must use still more."

Dr. Marage has an office full of plaster casts of throats of men, women and children and of perfect replicas of human mouths

A plaster reproduction of the normal woman's throat was made to speak the vowel "O" in ordinary tones by working a small bellows. Later, when the doctor built a similar model of a man's talking outfit he connected the bellows and pumped air through it as hard as he could

The result was a succession of gasping "O's" such as a dying man might utter with his last breath. In order to get a resonant masculine tone, Dr. Marage was compelled to install an electric air pump and a compressed air tank.

With a current of air equal to the capacity of four bellows, he produced a low tone. With a pressure roughly equivalent to nine bellows, the model uttered a deep shout

Recently the physician added the model of a six-year-old child's throat to his collection. This little mechanism fills the house with a high, penetrating sound, even when the bellows are worked at one-fifth the speed that operates the woman's model

For men who have broken down from overwork, Dr. Marage frequently prescribes, not a change of climate, but a change of language. In other words, he orders them to go to some country where they do not understand a word that is spoken and only use their mouths for eating. The energy saved by silence is as much to the ordinary man as would be gained by staying in bed. Very rarely does Dr. Marage order his women patients to keep quiet

"It isn't as important for them," says the doctor, "and, besides, they really couldn't do it."

There is, however, a prominent New York nerve specialist who has lost several fair patients of the "400" because after listening to their troubles he gruffly advised:

"Go to bed and hold your tongue for a week"

Such trained vocalists as Mr. Delmas, senior counsel for the defence, are frequently compelled to ask for an adjournment or retire in favor of some one else, because their voices give out completely."

He must drive four times as much air through his 'voice box' as she does in order to be heard at all. If he wishes to talk as loud as she, he must use still more."

Dr. Marage Photographing a Patient's Voice

A recent example of the endurance of the female voice was seen in the Thaw trial Mrs. Thaw, on the witness stand almost continuously for six days, suffering the worst mental torment that could have been inflicted and far from well otherwise, showed no sign of weakness in her voice through it all. Such trained vocalists as Mr. Delmas, senior counsel for the defence, are frequently compelled to ask for an adjournment or retire in favor of some one else, because their voices give out completely or continuous talking, such as the "barkers" at amusement resorts like Coney Island and the "spielers" in front of clothing stores found in certain quarters of all big cities.

Not content with imitating the human throat, lungs and mouth, Dr. Marage now photographs your voice, and an expert has he becomes at reading these "voice negatives" that he can unroll a film and read off the words that have been spoken

If they are sung, he can, after a few trials, get the time pretty well, but if there was a single instrument accompanying the singer he has difficulty. A piano or orchestral accompaniment makes such a complex record that he can not make it out even by long study

Like all his other strange inventions, its purpose was purely to aid in treating patients. He is the last appeal in stubborn ailments of voice and throat, nose, ears and kindred troubles.

His patients are the wealthiest in all the world, and some of them are of the very poorest, for doctors are accustomed to send "interesting" cases to him. Cases these are that "interest" because they are hopelessly obscure to the average specialist, or because they will not yield to ordinary treatment.

The voice photography is achieved by means of a microphone. This instrument, which has been known for years, but has had very little practical value, magnifies small sounds tremendously. The noise of a spider or a fly walking about sounds through a microphone like an elephant shuffling over a tin roof

Instead of connecting the microphone to his ear, Dr. Marage has put a needle, which is kept always wet, in its place. In a microphone the waves of sound are transformed into electric waves of much greater intensity.

These waves the French scientist has made to move a wet needle back and forth over a chemically treated film. When there is silence in the room the needle draws a straight line over the film as it runs.

Sound of any kind, whether a woman speaking or a fly walking across the transmitter, makes the needle vibrate and draw a zig-zag line such as is shown in the reproduction of his photographs on this page.

The heavier, coarser set of lines are the photographs of the woman "A, E, I" spoken by a man, the lower set are the same spoken by a woman. It will be noticed how much sharper and clearer cut the woman's zig-zags are than the man's

This is also one of the reasons that women do not need to use as much energy as men in talking, as their words are more easily understood when spoken in a low tone than men's are.

With a powerful magnifying glass Dr. Marage is able to read the phonograph record of a person talking if he speaks very slowly and distinctly, and there are no other sounds to complicate the record.

The photographic process is much simpler and needs no magnifying. It is the belief of scientists that his "voice photos" when improved will eventually take the place of writing and a phonebook altogether. Stenography, too, would be abolished.

Instead of writing a letter the sender would talk into the stenophone, pull out the strip of zig zags when through and mail it. The receiver would read the zig-zags and know exactly what he had said.

Forgery would be out of the question, for hard as it is to imitate another's voice sufficiently to fool the ear, it is absolutely impossible to deceive the electric needle which faithfully records every shade of tone. All lisps, nasal inflections and slurring of words are revealed with mathematical precision.

For books and newspapers the plan is to have a conventional imitation of the zig-zags of the various vowels and consonants in the form of type, which will be set in lines like ordinary printed matter. Abbreviations, of course, would be necessary, as the needle record of a spoken sentence is longer than the same words in small type.

Telephone conversations would be as binding as a written contract of to-day. When the parties come to terms they could connect the little microphone and the film to the telephone wire and say just what each agrees to. The film would record beyond all argument just what was said and who said it.

If the law of the future calls for it a notary could put in his little statement at the end to the effect that at his end of the wire Mr. So and So had appeared personally before him and was known to him, etc., etc.

The possibility of sending verbal messages across the Atlantic Ocean by cable with the aid of the microphone and wet need is also contemplated as a probability, with all the advantages this would involve.

Kings Who at One Time Have Lived in America

ON October 25, 1796, there appeared in New York, of Philadelphia, this announcement: "Among the passengers ... for America was L. P. d'Orleans, eldest ... of the celebrated Egalite, and distinguished in French history as a patriot-general at the battle of Jemappes." Thus was chronicled the advent of a future king of France into the United States. A fugitive from the maelstrom of the French Revolution, Louis Philippe, son of the Duke of Orleans, who lost his life on the guillotine in 1793, had gone out into the world on an equal footing with the average man of education. Under an assumed name he taught school in Switzerland and traveled in Norway, Sweden and Lapland, studying people and conditions with a zest before unknown to a member of either the Bourbon or Orleans family. The Directory of France felt that the nation would be less perturbed if he were out of the way, and offered the prince the liberty of his two brothers if they would all go to America

Gouverneur Morris, United States Minister to France, loaned the money on which Philippe every penny is accounted for, and later every penny was duly repaid.

Louis Philippe waited in Philadelphia for the coming of his brothers, the Count de Montpensier, and the Count Beaujolais, who arrived in a ship bringing home eighty Americans newly freed from slavery in Algiers. The brothers kept house for several months on Fourth street, Philadelphia, their only servant being a faithful attendant who followed them from France. The seat of government was then in Philadelphia, so they saw the inauguration of John Adams and heard Washington's farewell address. It was here that the friendliness grew in Washington's heart for these frail exiled youths, and later they were his guests at Mount Vernon

It was the wish of the princes to study this country as Louis Philippe had studied Europe, and they planned an extensive horseback trip through the then Far West. Washington drew a pocket map for the, indicating the route, and with a few servants and counselors the princes set out from Mount Vernon, visiting the Falls, Madisons, and Lees on the way. They went down the valley through Virginia, into Tennessee, and Kentucky, visiting Indian villages, studying slave life. Fair Oaks and Gaines Mill. After the Seven Days Battle around Richmond, they left this country because the Napoleon attempt to place Maximilian on the throne of Mexico threatened to strain the relations between France and the United States

The Bonapartes alternated the exile life with the Bourbon Orleans princes. In 1803 Jerome Bonaparte, later King of Westphalia, came to the United States from Martinique, rebellious at the dictatorial manner of his imperial brother, who would make a soldier out of him whether he would or no. In Baltimore he fell victim to the beauty of Betsy Patterson. His marriage to her, his recall by the indignant Emperor, the imprisonment of Pope Pius VII. at Fontainebleau because he would not grant a divorce, the separation decreed by the accommodating council of state, and the granting of an annuity of $12,000 to "Miss Patterson" by Napoleon are all old paragraphs in history

Thus, years later, Napoleon III determined to reconcile the American line as heirs to the throne of France, through the King of Westphalia, should his own line fail, but the wily Jerome overpersuaded him in favor of his other children, and the Baltimore Bonapartes remained on this side to contribute to the executive staff of the United States Government.

MR. BOLTON HALL in a new book "Three Acres and Liberty" [illegible] by The Macmillan Co., New York, [illegible] out a way for any man, woman, boy or girl to escape from the hunger [illegible] city life and live in the country.

[illegible] is necessary today to teach people to obtain a livelihood directly from the earth, he says. "We are told there only because we think we are tied."

He then proceeds to show [illegible] hands of city dwellers have left [illegible] the glorious country, and have made a [illegible] living and grown rich on as small a tract as three acres. Some have [illegible] dependence [illegible] gives a fraction of an acre.

Mr. Hall's words and advice are a veritable gospel to the city folk who are hungry to live in the country, with its sweet air and plentiful food, and escape the dirt, noise, slavery and increasing cost of city life.

This apostle of country life begins with the assurance that it is not nearly so difficult to get back to the soil as most people suppose.

"It is not necessary," he writes, "to bury oneself in the country, nor with the new facilities of transportation, need we, unless we wish to pay the extravagant rents and enormous cost of living in the city.

"A little bit of land [illegible] the city can be rented or bought [illegible] terms. Merchandising will be no one to the city often enough.

"Neither is hard labor needed; but it is called, to 200 feet long. This would form feet, two subsidiaries, a garden grass, blackto work [illegible] that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] orange [illegible] 1.25 cts is a square foot, will 2 also young trees, $40 [illegible] would succeed in gardening we [illegible] of downfalls, 4 apri ot trees, 2 [illegible] constantly and [illegible] to [illegible] trees, 9 rose bushes, 12 lemon [illegible] acres."

"By thought and courage," he says later, expect to reap a reward of from $300 to trees in bearing, 1 lima tree, which sold $2,000 a year, as much as a clerkship yields, while three to five times the amount of land will bring an income that many a salaried man in the city would envy.

Besides, there is the joy of life, health, freedom from fear of [illegible] and [illegible] that come with such a life.

Intensive cultivation, the growing of as much as possible on a small piece of ground by scientific methods, is the key to the new [illegible] of farming. Anyone can learn how to [illegible] Mr. Hall says, by observing what the up-to-date truck gardeners do, for, he says, the modern methods in agriculture have nearly all [illegible] from market gardeners. In cases of the rural population [illegible] experts in all lines of [illegible] science and none keeps in closer touch with the agricultural colleges and experiment stations.

It is by careful [illegible] saving, by not applying [illegible] that the successful gardener [illegible] 5,000 bushels of potatoes on one acre, worth in the city markets a dollar a bushel, while [illegible] farmer [illegible] to one-tenth [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] a bushel.

But more astonishing than this is the value of products raised on some model Long Island farms, amounting to $3,320 for one acre. An accompanying table shows the items making up this phenomenal yield, which are vouched for by the Rev. George J. Newton, whose present address is Wellfleet, Mass.

Another instance cited by Mr. Hall of what can be accomplished on a single acre of ground is shown by William E. Smythe, the well-known irrigation expert, of California. Mr Smythe found an acre [illegible] at Orland, in the Sacramento Valley, on which he [illegible] and became a money lender during a period of [illegible] years.

Some of [illegible] in the name on the white gates are now making [illegible] Puget Sound, the greatest [illegible] island in the sea of flowering bulbs.

On a 20-acre farm, near Portland, Ore., is a very called Oaklea Journal, who makes $4,000 a year from raising onions alone. He gets a choice [illegible] acre. He bought no [illegible] the land for [illegible] years, and is now writing. He has never used a pound of fertilizer, as the soil is [illegible] rich beaver dam land; but he cultivates every foot of the ground.

Nearly all the persons who have accomplished such results in small farming are people who have gone out of the big cities and got a little land [illegible] could not afford to get any larger tract, and they have made a far greater success proportionate to their means than the bonanza farmers and ranchmen of the West.

Of late years the greatest [illegible] agriculture. Mr. Hall observes [illegible] by [illegible] this class of people, on three and five acre tracts. The increasing high scale of wages demanded by farm hands has not affected the small farmer, because he needs no help, or very little, when [illegible] are [illegible] stands of bees.

Such variety and semi-tropical luxuriance of high-priced products is of course out of the question in most parts of this country. But almost equally great profits have been made in widely different localities.

Mr. Hall tells of a man in the extreme northwest Pacific Coast, who conceived the idea of making a specialty of growing tulip bulbs on one of the islands of Puget Sound. He is George Gibbs, of Clearbrook, Wash., whose home is on Orcas Island. He was observant enough to see that the warm, moist climate of that region was peculiarly favorable to bulbs. [illegible] years ago he began to grow bulbs. He had failures but he kept right on. His [illegible] are now making [illegible]

A Deserted Farm. Dilapidated as This Looks, It Is a Good Foundation for a Habitation. A Little Money and Time Would Turn It Into a Home.

[illegible] by the word "cheap," he does not mean the lowest priced ground. Land at $100 an acre near a large city or town with good markets, may, he says, be really cheaper than land at $10 an acre in a remote country district.

Once a piece of land is planted in the country scores of novel ways of making money will present themselves to thoughtful and ingenious people.

One man discovered that he could raise [illegible] the quantity of potatoes on a given piece of ground by raising each [illegible] grow up through an old nail keg from which the ends had been knocked out. The stalks grew larger were much juicier and commanded a much higher price.

An agreeable [illegible] in such many women have a [illegible] is that of flower [illegible] under glass or [illegible] may be grown all of these in [illegible] what [illegible] and climate of the region is particularly adapted for.

The raising of drug plants is also considered. Mr. Hall advises [illegible] farmer to discover what weeds can be sold for drugs, rather than to be [illegible] his own experience and observation. In house and home building.

No one can be able to [illegible] or rather two tents, at an outlay of $45, a comfortable [illegible] cook stove. [illegible] from rough board house can be built for $200 to $300.

Or if a person can invest $900 in a house he can have something in the form of a bungalow, like that erected at Berkeley Heights, New Jersey. It has a touch of the artistic in its pretty [illegible] interior woodwork finish and general [illegible].

For a person who may resort to portable houses, which may be bought from the manufacturers at from $200 to $500 [illegible] one of these kind of houses enables a man to quickly set up a home on the piece of farm land he has chosen. But Mr. Hall advises the new farmer to buy land with some kind of a house already upon it, if possible, and [illegible] the old [illegible].

1000 PRIZES EVERY WEEK AND A CHANCE TO WIN $10,000 WORTH OF OTHER PRIZES

Also 10,000 Sam Loyd Puzzle Books for the Egg Puzzle.

MY puzzle to-day is about an Egg—you will find it either on the back page of this Magazine or on the special "Prize Supplement" which is folded in with the Comic Section to-day. But before solving the Egg puzzle, listen to something about the prizes. The offer of 10,000 Puzzle Books each week to those who guess the Sam Loyd puzzle on the other side of this page in itself created a furore and enthusiasm which remind one of the popular craze over the "14-15 Puzzle" and "Pigs in Clover," but when the lucky ones get their books and find that $10,000 worth of valuable prizes are being offered free to those who can guess the puzzles their enthusiasm knows no bounds. An extra corps of readers are engaged examining the valuable suggestions regarding good and acceptable prizes. The $10,000 appropriation has not yet been exhausted, and there is quite a sum left to procure such gifts as may prove acceptable to the majority.

The selection of a "Maxwell" Touring Car for the first prize has met with a most general approval and letters indorsing the selection are coming from every part of the United States.

The "Regina" Piano Company, of Rahway, would be flattered if they could see but a small part of the compliments paid to their instrument.

There is not a lady in the land who has not resolved to win that exquisite Silk Persian Rug, which is offered for third prize. Messrs. Vantine & Co. will be kept busy showing it during the contest as they have kindly offered to show it to competitors who may desire to see the prettiest thing of its kind in the country.

$1,000 "Regina" Player-Piano.
$500 Vantine Antique Oriental Silk Rug.
$100 William Reiman Diamond Ring and Watch.
$100 Schoverling, Daly & Gales Shot-Gun.
$25 Schoverling, Daly & Gales Fishing Rod.
50 Famous "Lyra" Phonographs.
50 Celebrated Waterman "Ideal" Fountain Pens.
144 Spalding's Finest Official League Base Balls
500 lbs. Greenfield & Sons Chocolates.

Several young men have already entered in competition for Mr. Reiman's Diamond Ring. They are evidently not deterred by his conditions. His beautiful Gold Watch, gentlemen's or ladies' style, will also be well worth winning.

The sportsman's prizes of a genuine Sauer & Sons' double-barrelled, hammerless gun, worth $100, ordered from the great sporting house of Schoverling, Daly & Gales, as well as the $25 Trout Rod are appreciated by those with sporting proclivities and the choice has been indorsed as a happy one.

The Lyra Phonographs will prove very acceptable in any household, and we may have to double or treble our order to Messrs. Denham & Co. to make our puzzlists really happy.

It goes without saying that the Waterman "Ideal" Pens will be acceptable to any one who appreciates the genuine ready writer that does its work when called upon without blotting. It's not only the best in the world, but it's the "only."

Miss E. Chatmere, herself an expert typewriter, says: "Seeing the valuable and practical tendency of your gifts, I would suggest a typewriter as a really serviceable present which might prove very valuable to the winner. I do not wish to disparage any make, as I have used them all; but I will say that I have been practising lately with a $50 New American, which I bought from the company, No. 265 Broadway, New York, and I indorse it as a strong, serviceable and very simple machine."

Miss Chatmere's indorsement is fully sufficient for us, as she knows more about such matters than we do. We have placed the order by telephone, and are pleased to place some American typewriters on our list of prizes.

Henry Chadwick, "the Father of Baseball," desires an inning, and strikes out in great shape. "Don't forget the American boy; give him a chance in the distribution. Scatter a few gross of fine league balls around among the lads and let them play. Give them the genuine professional ball, the best in the world (that means Spalding's, of course), and make their hearts glad."

Good for you, Chadwick! Our order for a gross of the best that can be made is already booked. So, play ball, boys!

We had something else to say and talk about, but here comes a letter from Miss Grace Margaret Gould, of the Woman's Home Companion, which crowds everything else out of our mind. She says: " * * * Of course I am delighted with your enterprise and liberality, and I do not wish to disparage those large and munificent prizes, but just let me say a few words for the children: the little tots who would appreciate some nice gift which would make them happy for the moment. Why not distribute some packages of candy—the genuine, pure, sweet, wholesome candy which would tend to surprise the little stomachs of those who never tasted the higher grade goods"

We thank Miss Gould for the kind suggestion, and trust she will receive the thanks of the thousand of "little tots" to whom we shall distribute half a ton of Greenfield's Son & Co.'s famous "chocolate sponge," in pound and half-pound boxes, which has been indorsed as the "daintiest sweetmeat in the world—something which will delight the children and please the whole household.

So much for the prizes—ten thousand Sam Loyd Puzzle Books for the best solutions of to-day's puzzle, and $10,000 worth of special prizes for those who send the best answers to the puzzles in the Sam Loyd Puzzle Books. Now, turn over on the back of this page (or find the puzzle in the Special Prize Section folded in with the Comic Supplement) and send in your answer to my Egg puzzle. SAM LOYD.

A Londoner's Wail About Our Language and Cooking

IS a conversation book a necessary adjunct to a tourist's kit when visiting America? asks a writer in the London Sphere. No one would imagine such a thing, his mother tongue is enough, and with this possession he leaves England for the States. Arrived at his hotel he thinks he will read up the local news of New York while he is resuming his shirt legs. He begins with an account of a wedding, when he is suddenly pulled up by reading that the bridegroom wore a frock hat, an Albert and Oxfords! This may be an adequate description to an American, but few Englishmen would care to hazard a guess if it were the ordinary accepted wedding costume of silk hat and frock coat, for how many Englishmen as they regard with pride the starched glories of their shiniest silk hat ever wrote that they are about to don a derby hat? Further down the page the clergyman in his address is accused of "guff," and this is little help as to either the quality or quantity of his homily. Yet if the necessary dictionary were obtainable it would be found that "guff" is really most descriptive of many would be impressive sermons.

Surprises also lie in wait in business offices. Should one chance to be visiting an office at midday, instead of the great outpour to lunch and eating houses, as varied as the rx or one's purse, you quite naturally and cheerfully produce what is known as a "dinner pail."

Few Londoners would care to risk the comments of their companions, if a 1 o'clock they drew from the depths of a "dinner pail" such an alarming dish as—

Two slices of graham bread, well buttered, filled with a mixture of chopped nuts, dates and figs, a square of apple cake, a small dish of fruits chopped finely and French dressing, a cup of milk

Yet to an American office man such a lunch, far from causing either astonishment or amusement, would be as ordinary a sight as a plate of ham and a roll of butter to a Lyons waitress. Apples are well known articles of food, and so is cake; but what is "apple cake"? An American business woman is also entrusted with a "dinner pail," in which she finds such delicacies as

A baked apple, the core of which is filled with chopped nuts; two thin slices of whole wheat bread buttered; a small mould of tomato jelly

In those all-but-paternal monthly United States journals for home building, the prizes especially devoted to the consumerist of homes, one finds that the lunches may be varied with a jar of rice pudding, a cup of milk, lettuce with nonsensine dressing, rye bread filled with olives of creamed cheese, or dates stuffed with pecans.

A mild amusement gradually grows as one reads, for surely raw pudding requires spoons or forks if it is to be eaten at all; and how do cups of milk and mayonnaise dressing travel to offices without spilling.

Either a dinner pail must be large as a Dutch oven or else in large continents Wends cannot refill in the irritating way that they do in this small island when carried in jars in a basket

Possibly the startling contents of such "dinner pails" are the necessary preparation, for the time being, of women who may expect to find when on their return home they sit down to their dilutify-spread evening meal such a menu as.—

Noodle soup
Clam chowder
Huckleberry jelly
Mush bread
Corn hash

It never is difficult at first sight to decide which of these courses require knives and which spoons. There seem infinite possibilities about "clam chowder."

In one of the kindly journals already referred to [illegible] nothing at length to venture confident [illegible] with [illegible] the sight of [illegible] suggests that "if such a [illegible] you cannot have a [illegible] not get what you need [illegible] quite satisfied." How to Regain Your Husband's Love When You Have Lost It.

By Amy Van Worden Spencer.

THIS is the query: "Just what a wife should a woman wife do who believes that her husband, whom she adores, is growing indifferent to her?"

Sit down alone by yourself in a quiet room and relax every muscle and take fifty deep inhalations of fresh air, slowly exhaling your breath, until you feel calm and are able to think clearly and without prejudice. The deep breaths will assist you to do this.

Then study yourself carefully as you would study another person, and try and see wherein you may have failed to be attractive.

Remember, a wife is a threefold being, and must attract from three sources if she would the husband—yet wives are usually seen exerting in these requirements their husbands. However, we may do are that a man should be as liberal in amount as a woman toward the loved one, we must face the fact that he rarely is, and accept the situation which six seems to drive inside inevitable and reason and might

A husband may "drop off" in personal appearance and grow a little neglectful in dress, without changing the sentiment of affection in the heart of his wife. Indeed when he seems to be prematurely aging from any cause she often loves him the more, with that maternal affection which is frequently added to wifely devotion.

But man's nature is such that paternal love rarely supplements the love a passing wife begins to fade.

Therefore, it should behoove woman to study herself from a scientific and hygienic standpoint, and make a business of retaining her health and her beauty.

With proper attention given to physical exercise, the care of the complexion, sensible diet, and right thinking, a woman may grow in beauty and personal attraction with every year, at least until she reaches the half century mark, and we have examples of women who have gone on far beyond that time even, and at sixty rivalled younger belles in their powers to charm eye, ear and heart.

With every year after twenty-four a woman should be more and more careful in the study of what is becoming to her in apparel, and should take greater pains to be always well groomed and neat in her attire

Not by any or gaudy garments should she attempt to disguise the passing of time, nor by extravagance, but by appropriate and becoming apparel, which requires less money than thought and taste.

But do not hesitate to praise when [illegible] becomes a self-evident [illegible] when you [illegible] make [illegible] to others, while [illegible] to your husband or dissatisfied position of wife with [illegible] leave

This [illegible] husband [illegible] above [illegible] the woman who all men [illegible] admire [illegible] and entertaining, and make his realize [illegible] that no more tactful, and charming woman is to be found outside of his home.

Yet, let him see that you are able to entertain yourself and attract entertained people to your side when he is in no mood to

Nothing arouses a man's attention so [illegible] him this fact—that a woman is getting on very well without him. It hurts his vanity and his pride, and he is far more likely to return to his allegiance than if she sulks and mopes and accuses him of neglect

Be careful to control yourself when you feel anger and jealousy taking possession of your mind. Remember how subtle coming such moods are, and how unlikely to with back a falling interest. Go out for a walk, or practice your music, or take a half hour's exercise at deep breathing and physical culture until you have command of your [illegible]

In such [illegible]

If after [illegible] thorough and systematic course of this treatment your husband continues to grow indifferent, you will, of course, realize that you drew a moral blunk in the history of marriage. But you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you have made every effort to awaken the best in his nature while you have cultivated the best in yourself.

And there will be a certain happiness in the consciousness that you have grown in physical, mental, and spiritual power through your trouble.

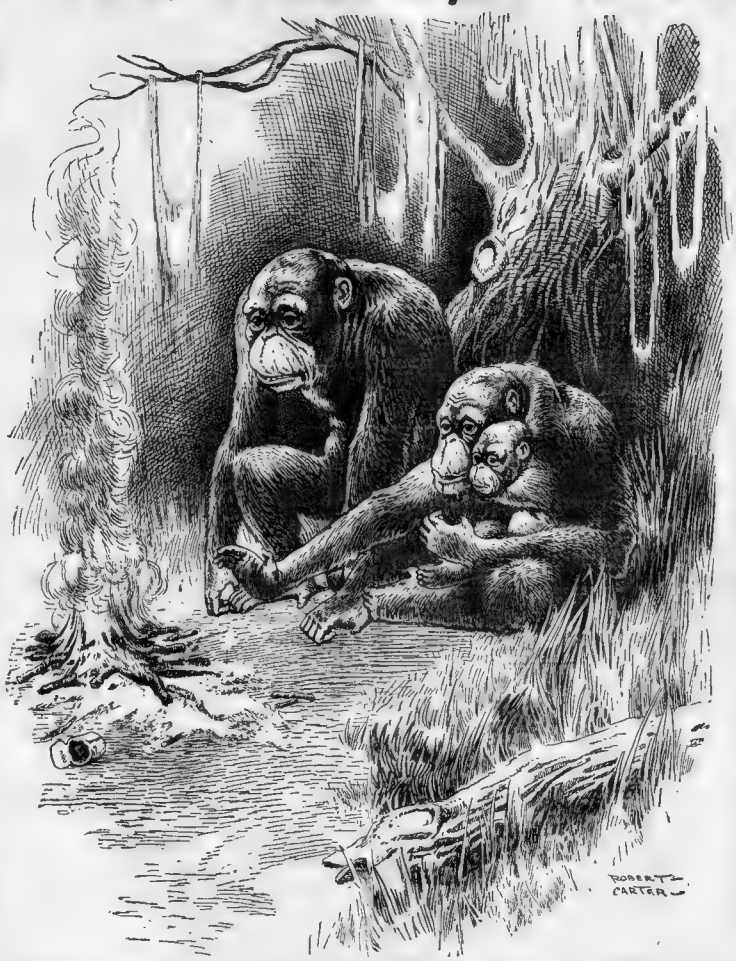
BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, JULY 7, 1907.

Are OUR Minds Open to Truth?

One Man Thought of the Law of Gravitation, Seeing an Apple Fall. How Many of Us Would Have Thought of It?



We Smile Contemptuously at These Ignorant Monkeys, Whose Dull Minds Never Suggested Building a Fire. BUT—

Another Man Thought of the Steam Engine, Watching a Steaming Kettle. How Many of Us Would Have Got Any Idea from THAT?

IN the forest the traveller builds his fire to cook his meals and for night protection from wild beasts. He eats, sleeps and moves on. As he disappears, blinking, brown eyes look at him from the trees.

The mother holds the baby monkey close enough, but not too close, as she stretches out her leathery hands to warm them. The father ape stands staring at the flames with their grateful heat. He warms his chest, his hairy knees, and he feels dull gratitude.

The flames burn for a while, the wood that the human traveller piled up is slowly consumed, the fire dies down, smoulders away, even the curling smoke stops.

The monkey family find that they are getting cold. There is no more heat for the outstretched hand. The father, mother and baby monkey climb into the tree again, cold and wondering why the fire went out.

IT HAS NEVER OCCURRED TO THEM TO PUT A STICK OF WOOD ON THAT FIRE.

Darwin and other students of animals and of evolution have commented on the fact that no monkey ever knew enough to keep a fire going. In all the history of the world, from the beginning until now, no monkey ever started a fire. No animal but man ever intentionally added a stick to a burning fire, once the fire was started.

The wise men tell us that this is fortunate, for if monkeys had known how to start and feed fires they would have multiplied immensely in numbers, AND THEY WOULD HAVE BURNED OFF THE FORESTS OF THE EARTH BEFORE MAN ARRIVED HERE TO CUT THEM UP INTO WARSHIPS AND HOUSES FOR HIS OWN USE.

When Giordano Bruno, great and noble character, was burned alive because he professed and insisted upon the truth, a little child watching the soldiers piling up the wood that was to burn the brave man picked up a stick, toddled to the feet of the great martyr and put the stick on the bonfire with the best of intentions.

Bruno, about to die, looked down sorrowfully and kindly upon the child, murmuring "Sancta simplicitas"—"Sacred simplicity."

The act of that child, three or four years old, innocently adding to a bonfire that was to destroy a great man, is absolutely beyond the intellectual power of the wisest monkey or the most philosophical elephant.

This is not, however, an editorial about monkeys or elephants, or about the foolish and fortunately extinct practice of burning men for discovering the truth and telling it.

This is an editorial intended to show that we human beings should constantly question ourselves, mistrust and stimulate our own lack of intellectual adaptability.

We are apt to sneer contemptuously at this family of monkeys. They do look foolish and pathetic there, with their hands stretched out to the fire dying before their eyes. They seem more foolish when they climb back to shiver in the tree-top after the fire is dead.

But ARE THEY SO VERY FOOLISH, AS COMPARED WITH US?

It is very stupid not to know enough to put a stick of wood on a burning fire. It is a dull mind that cannot protect or better itself with a little brain activity.

But how do we HUMAN beings, on the average, stand? Are WE so quick at seeing a new truth? Do OUR minds take new ideas so easily?

Beside the monkey picture we have had placed, on the right and the left, two small pictures. These two pictures ought to make human beings feel pretty humble.

There is an apple falling from a tree in one picture. Newton, seeing it fall, began to THINK, and discovered the Law of Gravitation.

Thousands of millions of human beings had seen the apple fall without ever thinking about anything.

Were they so much more brilliant than those monkeys?

One man of genius noticed the power in the steaming kettle. The force of the steam rocked the kettle and lifted the lid. The idea came into this man's mind that as there was a POWER in steam that steam could be hitched up and made to do the world's work.

That one idea was the basis of the prosperity of human beings. That one idea gave to the human race wealth that can only be computed in hundreds of thousands of millions.

Millions upon millions of human beings had watched the proof of steam's power ever since the first primitive man boiled water in the first fireproof receptacle.

If men could watch steam for twenty thousand years without ever thinking about using its force, CAN WE BLAME THE MONKEYS THAT HAVE SEEN FIRE FOR A FEW THOUSAND YEARS WITHOUT EVER THINKING ABOUT STARTING A FIRE OR KEEPING ONE GOING?

The greatest quality that a human brain can have is RECEPTIVITY, the open, impressionable character THAT TAKES THE NEW IDEA WELCOME and that gives life.

A majority of human beings are abundantly endowed with the denseness of the monkey kind—gazing, wondering, NEVER CREATING.

A truth put before humanity is often not accepted except after hundreds of years of fighting and arguing.

The plainest facts create no impression until they have been repeated and fought over and FORCED UPON UNWILLING, DULL HUMAN MINDS.

At least the monkey, when he sees a fire burning, knows enough to come down from the tree and sit near the fire and get warm.

But ordinary human beings, when they see a new idea, instead of accepting it, gathering around it, enjoying and blessing its light and warmth, TURN AGAINST IT AND DENOUNCE IT.

Suppose this family of monkeys, seeing the fire, had rushed to the topmost bough of the tree, denouncing the fire, expressing their hatred of it and their belief that it would probably freeze them?

They would not act more foolishly than does the average human being who has a plain and useful truth put before him.

When Galileo discovered that the earth was round and moved around the sun, turning on its axis, he was called a blasphemous maniac. And he would have been burned if he had not denied on his knees the truth that he had given to the world.

When Harvey announced such a simple, self-evident truth as the circulation of the blood, he was called a quack and a fool by almost the whole medical profession. It is a fact that no doctor over forty years of age would admit the truth of his discovery. Even the most intelligent human beings denounced as falsehood what every public school child now knows to be the truth.

When one of humanity's greatest benefactors discovered the use of anaesthetics, making it possible to render the brain unconscious during surgical operations, HE WAS DENOUNCED. They couldn't deny the truth of his statement—a whiff of chloroform could PROVE it. But they called him sacrilegious, on the ground that he was trying to interfere with the will of God. "God," said these blasphemous ignoramuses, "wants human beings to suffer. If you give a man chloroform when you cut off his leg and spare him the pain, you are thwarting the will of God."

Thus it has ever been in history. The railroad was denounced, first as impossible and then as dangerous. Illuminating gas, it was said, would blow cities to pieces. Many scientific inventors were denounced as partners of the devil—DENOUNCED BY THE DEVIL'S CHIEF PARTNER, IGNORANCE—and compelled to hide their discoveries.

Are things so much better to-day?

How easy is it to make people understand that they must have free minds, free thought, and united, independent action of brain and ballot to protect themselves? How many are able to see the plainest truth in political economy and independent government when put before them?

How many of us can free ourselves from the traditions, the ignorance, the mental dulness that keeps us back, just as that poor family of monkeys are kept back by their ignorance more dense?

Let us try to cultivate openness of mind, originality and RECEPTIVITY of thought.

Let us be eager for the new truth, willing to at least LISTEN TO IT.

Humanity has only begun its discoveries. Real human happiness and prosperity are not even born as yet. They are to be born of the new truths, as those truths shall be given to men.

The human race was not put on this beautiful earth, fertile, rich and safe, to pass life in anxiety and want.

A majority of human beings are poor, anxious about the future, filled with forebodings, BECAUSE, LIKE THESE WRETCHED MONKEYS, WE CANNOT EVEN SEE THE TRUTH WHEN IT IS PUT BEFORE US.

We hope that the readers of this newspaper will constitute themselves a great army of truth-seekers and TRUTH-ACCEPTERS. These readers number millions already, and the good that they can do in this nation and on this planet by encouraging original thought and fearless truth is infinite.

LET US KEEP OUR MINDS OPEN, READY TO SEE THE TRUTH WHEN IT COMES.

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Let Not Misfortune Ruin You—By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

TWIN BORN. A Poem. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

He who possesses virtue at its best,
Or Greatness, in the true sense of that word,
Has started even with the horde,
Whose swift feet now speed but at sin's behest.
It is the same force in the human breast
Which makes men gods or demons.
If we gird
Those strong emotions by which we are stirred

A GREAT many [illegible] of the moral law given [illegible] the march of [illegible]

A common sense has replaced hysteria. We have supplemented superstition. When a stroke of lightning falls on a girl who is outlying [illegible] no longer conceive it to be a bolt from God for her "wickedness." They know that microbes and people at prayer are as likely to suffer from the elements as the wicked ones of earth.

We know that insanity is a disease, and that its victims should be tenderly and carefully treated, not beaten and chained in dark dungeons [illegible] as the "evil spirits," as was the custom with our charming ancestors.

A more wholesome religion has taken the place of the old creeds, and we do not regard sickness, poverty and gloom as a necessary part of a Christian life, nor do we believe that all who possess health, wealth and happiness [illegible] after death to even up things.

We have learned that a right attitude of mind toward the SOURCE OF ALL CREATED THINGS, a spirit of love and good toward God and man, a cheerful optimism pervading life, and a consciousness of its large opportunities will bring us all we need on earth and fit us to obtain whatever we desire beyond.

All these changes in thinking have come to the human race, and certain other changes are in the air.

Woman has always been a sufferer from the false ideals of the makers of moral laws in civilized lands.

Men have formed these laws, and with shrewd [illegible]

[illegible] the law of nature, which made woman a mood for unborn children, man has magnified her motherly duty, and dwarfed to nothing his own.

[illegible] woman has been made to believe that [illegible] to the breath on the bloom of the peach of [illegible] though breathed in ignorance!

[illegible] an irremovable blemish, which might descend to the third and fourth generation; [illegible] loathsome physical, mental and [illegible] of which he might be equally [illegible] to more fully appreciate her own [illegible] he may debarred him from his own [illegible] the father of her children.

During the last hundred years this idea has begun to be questioned in the world, and, with woman's enlarged field of usefulness, other avenues have been opened for one who has made human mistakes besides the grave of the friends and the cell of the religious recluse.

Man, too, has begun to realize that he has a share in moral responsibility and can suffer public condemnation for a vicious life; and that his children can be victims of paternal as well as the maternal dishonor.

Yet another century must pass before the old, unjust standards set for woman can be wholly swept away. The following letter shows how these standards have cramped the mind of woman and made her the victim of unnecessary mental suffering for sorrows not of her own making:

"The many recent attacks on children by men has prompted me to write you this letter.

"I am just nearing my eighteenth birthday—a time in every girl's life which certainly should be as beautiful as the approaching springtime after a severe winter.

"But it is not so with me. I was abused once as a child by a man and ruined for life, unless kind Providence can come me a way out of it. When I was younger I did not feel it so much, but now—now is the time when I long to be among the company of young women and men, but I dare not attempt it for fear of gaining the friendship of any man, for I know I can never marry.

"I do not wish the man, whoever he may be, who attacked me, any trouble. I would say that I would rather see him in glory and happiness. But I only wish that for one brief moment he could feel as I feel just now. I am not selfish, neither do I wish to make the lives of others miserable for my misfortune, but I would like to have only able to take a companion in life, when my turn comes, for my disposition is such as to make me loved.

"Please write an article, an appeal to the men of our city, to think of the life of the ruined girl, while he escapes free—free to do and dare again. Ask them to stop and think, if mother ones were attacking their sisters, what would they do? I, perhaps, will have to be reconciled to my lot, but my heart bleeds for and pities every unfortunate girl whom I cannot help but [illegible]

The pathos and the tragic element in this letter must appeal to every reader. Like it are quite [illegible] is to be particularly observed is the poor girl's erroneous idea, fostered and fed by the false training of the sex for centuries, that the physical misfortune she has suffered renders her morally unfit to be a good wife and mother.

This girl is no more "ruined" for these holy offices than she would be had she passed through a railroad accident.

Wild beasts in animal or human form roam about the earth, and it is a sad and terrible event when [illegible] falls a prey to their ferocity.

There is little use addressing a direct appeal to such beasts. They are not capable of reasoning.

Somebody Some, aided by Law, will realize that, while the murder of the human beasts is only transferring their evil propensities from one plane of life to another, there is a safe and certain method of restraining them from repeating their atrocities, and that this method will be an effectual preventive of the increase of such creatures.

But the point under discussion now is the future of these girl-wives. In the present state of man's activities there are few men who are physically or mentally on such a high moral plane that they could afford to regard such a girl as my correspondent unworthy of their respect and companionship.

Should this girl win the affection of some young man, as she suggests, and were he to open the book of his life to some wise, brave [illegible] there is small probability that the record would enable him to act as her accuser.

If, as the victim of a brutal accident, he did not consider her a proper person to be the mother of his children, would he consider himself a deliberate transgressor of social laws, worthy to be the father?

Let us have done with these ridiculous and senseless ideas regarding the sex question.

And let all mothers of helpless girls who are made victims of such monsters cease harping upon that old theme of "ruined for life."

Him for man or woman in or come from a degraded mind, body and soul, there is no easily thought, degenerate tendencies and low standards.

The girl who wrote the letter quoted above is no more ruined than if she had fallen into a pit and broken her bones.

Let her know positively that away the memory of her misfortune and go forth into the world and accept all joys that may come to her as her right.

"Ruin for man or woman must come from a diseased mind, base thoughts, degenerate tendencies and low standards."

A FOOL

A fool tricked out in motley smiled on his lord, and said to him, "Sir, what is the difference between my foolishness and thine?"

"Say on," quoth the lord

"Well, of mine," quoth the fool, "I make a profession."

NOBODY

The millionaire gave his bride a $100,000 diamond necklace At dinner the next day he inquired

"Why don't you wear the necklace?"

"Because there is nobody to see it," she said simply.

NECESSITY

"The common people are always right," exclaimed the politician. "They will never submit to injustice or sanction it. Their Judgment is always right

"Why do you say such things," asked the philosopher, "when you know that they are constantly submitting to injustice, and that that is the chief trouble in the world to-day?"

"If I told them that, I should lose my best opportunity of making a living," explained the politician

FOOLS' WISDOM.

"Alas!" said the Wise Man, "I shall die of thirst."

"Alas!" said the Fool, "I am dying of hunger."

Whereat the Wise Man, though his swollen tongue was hanging out, proceeded to prove by the rules of logic that hunger was much longer to be borne than thirst, while hastening his steps to keep pace with the Fool

Thus, presently, the Wise Man was amazed to perceive, close at hand, the crystal waters and ripe fruits of the Oasis, El Obeid.

When he had quenched his thirst he said to the Fool:

"O, Wise Man," returned the Fool, with a sly smile, "being now filled with the eloquence of thy wisdom I no longer hunger."

The Wise Man was silent, but he thought deeply.

MILDRED WYCKOFF

EPIGRAMS ON WOMEN

By Mildred Wyckoff

A thrifty woman will make her home attractive, though it may be a hut in the wilderness.

Woman's honesty is proverbial. The exceptions are few and far between.

Women never enter into conspiracies with one another Men usually conceive them and induce women to join in their execution.

A wronged woman should be implacable, but rarely is She is more likely to forgive and forget

It is supposed that the injunction to turn the other cheek if one is smitten was directed exclusively to women.

Women are supposed to hide behind a smiling face all the sorrows of an aching heart. Many succeed in practicing the deception.

The woman who betrays the anguish of her soul to the world forfeits her claim to the sympathy of her sincere friends

If women would only realize that few are interested in their woes or their ambitions, they would not so often become bores and nuisances.

Women rarely underestimate their own worth. Proper dignity and self-respect command the admiration so much desired by all women.

Egotism in a man is trying; in a woman it is insufferable

The woman who claims the credit of her husband's success has probably contributed very little toward it.

Women are happiest who are willing to share in the reflected glory achieved by their husbands to which they have contributed someth ng

A noble woman is not easily daunted, and often displays greater heroism than a man would under like circumstances.

There is no time in the life of man when he can do without a woman. In infancy and old age he is dependent upon her tenderness and care; in middle life she is his helpmate and inspiration

The acknowledgment of one of the greatest men of the world, "All that I am or can be I owe to my angel mother"—Lincoln, should be an inspiration to all mothers to emulate the mother of Lincoln

Probably the last thought of most persons is of their mother

Women should make their homes so attractive that neither husbands nor children would wish for clubs in which to spend their leisure hours.

It speaks volumes for wives and mothers when their husbands and children are unwilling to leave home.

Why are men so selfish? Because their mothers and wives have made them so by anticipating their wants and waiting upon them

The most laudable ambition in a woman is to keep space with her husband in his achievements and hold his love by her tenderness and devotion.

Jealousy is the most fatal disease that ever attacked man or woman

The Immortality of Love

A Sunday Sermon By Dr. Madison C. Peters

Love never faileth.—I. Cor., xiii., 8.

THE love that lightens life acts instinctively on the hypothesis of eternity. In the untimely death of Arthur Henry Hallam, Tennyson lost his dearest friend; in his "In Memoriam" one poet wailed. As I look upon thy loving face, I feel that there is something in thy love that cannot wholly perish. We shall meet again, Clemantha!"

Love is forever. The marriage contract, "until death do us part," really does not mean a contract for this life only. Love's language is forever, and she speaks no other language. In one of George MacDonald's romances there is a young girl, early fully married, but who had never known [illegible] touched religion; who was not [illegible] to marry a [illegible] unbeliever. But it comes to pass that the [illegible] is awakened, and [illegible] to know more [illegible] a living reverence [illegible] of love's alphabet. [illegible] about to yield his young existence a sacrifice to the fate, his beloved Clemantha will love me?" And after a little divorce [illegible] asks if they shall meet again, to which he replies: "I asked that dreadful question of [illegible] the hills that seemed eternal—of the clear streams that flow forever—of the stars among whose fold of azure my spirit has soared. As I look upon thy loving face, I feel that there is something in thy love that cannot wholly perish. We shall meet again, Clemantha!"

As I look upon thy loving face, I feel that there is something in thy love that cannot wholly perish. We shall meet again, Clemantha!"

None of us want to be loved any other way, and if it were true that we should not meet and know one another in heaven, then, when our dead are said away in the grave, our love for them ought to die. But we do not cease to love the dead, neither do we love them less, but rather more than we love them living, with a love more unselfish and with less taint of earthliness about it, and if we, with all our restrictions upon us, can love so ardently, how much more can those who, with ever-broadening faculties having entered into the fulness of life, love with deeper passionateness?

The reunion of the eternal life of those we love in this does the certainty that the great heart of God will outlast in the eternity would life has established our [illegible] When our friends have crossed [illegible] the river we are somehow bound to them by the cords of a deathless love; we can, somehow, never realize that they are gone—the looks, the forms, the voices, the smiles of the dead are still with us. We feel their mysterious nearness. Love still teaches us to love them. In every tear we shed and sigh that we leave we have so many proofs in the soul itself that the dead, whose memory we so fondly cherish, still live, immortal beyond the grave.

We are richer for having loved, although we have lost. As Tennyson puts it:

"'Tis truth came borne with liter and pall—
I felt it when I sorrowed most;
'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all."

Whittier hopefully cries:

"Yet love will dream and faith will trust,
Since He who knows our need is just,
That somehow, somehow, meet we must.
Alas! for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!
Who hopeless lays his dead away
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles lay.—
Who hath not learned in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That life is ever lord of death
And love can never lose its own."

Holy affections as well as glorious bodies shall come forth from the tomb, suspended ties of love, which, like plants whose life retired during Winter into the bosom of the earth, will revive in vernal loveliness and blossom in an eternal Spring. Thus is the immortality that Christ brought to light through the Gospel, this agreeable hope, that we will surely rise again in new beauty when the Eternal Morning shall dawn upon the grave, this pleasurable anticipation which rises like a May sun over the world of social life, cheering, warming and quickening beautiful, sublunar [illegible] keenness of grief and lightens [illegible] short interval of sorrow between the death of our loved ones and our own, and leads us back the light of comfort from the dead.

Mirandy on the Self-Supporting Woman

By Dorothy Dix

"BR'ER JENKINS," remarked Mirandy, "was at my house las' night, an' he says as how de Census Bureau has des promulgated de announcement dat dere is 'bout five millions of wurkin' women in de United States

"'My Gord!' 'aclaims Ike wid a groan when he heard dat, 'ain't hit awful! It sho'ly do fill me wid pity to think of all dem delicate females what is got to earn deir own livings instid of having some strong an' manly arm ter lean on an' nothin' to do but to stay in dere cozy homes.'

"'Well,' says I, as I finished cleanin' up de dishes whar dey done et de supper dat I done cooked, an' set down to patch a hole in Sis Minervy Ann's britches, an' put a heel into little Teddy Roosterfelt's sock, whilst Ike an' Br'er Jenkins rars back in deir cheers an' lights deir pipes an' prepares to take deir ease by de fire, 'well, I ain't never took no census, but I lay dat ef I was to start out to count de noses of de wukin' women in dis country, I wouldn't find five million. I'd be able to spot 'bout fifty million of 'em de fust dash out of de box.'

"'How's that?' axes Ike. 'How comes you to be smarter dan dem Government counters?'

"'Because,' 'spons I, 'when I counted de wukin' women I wouldn't feel no call to leave out dem wives an' mothers what puts in 'bout twenty-fo' hours a day cookin', an' washin', an' scrubbin', an' sewin', an' patchin', an' nussin', an' dat even in deir time of rest sleeps wid one ear hung out for a croupy cough from de cradle.'

"'But, Sis Mirandy,' says Br'er Jenkins, 'de census des takes notice of dem women what follows a gainful occupation.'

"'Sech bein' de case,' 'spons I wid a meanin' look at Ike, 'dey sho'ly is exquusable den for overlookin' de wuk of a wife an' mother, for hit's a job dat don't draw down no pay envelope on a Saterday night, an' dat folks flunk dat a woman does for fun.'

"'Hush, woman,' says Ike. 'You don't know de trials an' de tribulations dat dom lady brakesmen an' lady policemen, an' lady firemen has got.'

"'Maybe not,' 'groes I, 'but I'se got a mouchty lively idee of de wuk an' do worry dat a woman is up against dat has a average husband an' fo' small chilien, an' a teethin' baby, an' twins, an' a money puss dat is dat flat dat hit looks like an elephant is done step on hit. Furdermo' I takes notice dat women what wukks out of deir own free will an' accord looks younger an' has twice as many good clothes as dem whut wuks at home.

"'All de women on dis block what is married has to git deir own breakfus, has to git deir own n-sittin' breakfast, an' sewin' up holes in stockin's, an' prettin' a man off to wuk, an' de chilien off to school befo' Sally Ann Jones, whut clerks in de dry goods store, kin git her own hoss hooked up to a typewriter in a office, santers by to der labors, an' we still is sweepin' up dirt an' doin' odd chores when we see dem a-segasauntin' out of a evenin'. Dey ain't nothin' to git supper for dey is done, but ours is still a-doin', an' gwine to keep on doin' ontell bedtime. For dere ain't no Wives' Union to go on a strike for a eight-hour day.

"'An' of you'll take notice you'll see dat at de pra'r meetin' or at de love feast de sisters dat drap in late, an' dat look wo' an' frazzled, an' bet up an' lak dey ain't had time to git deir clothes on straight, ain't dem ladies whut dey calls de po' unfortunate wukin' women. Naw, sir, ev'y time dey's a wives an' mothers whut ain't got nothin' to do but to stay in de peaceful precincts of home an' git de dinner, an' de supper, an' clean up de house, an' find ev'y-body else's clothes for 'em, an' git 'em dressed befo' dey could git off demselves.'

"'Er a woman dat is got a husband to support her know how bleat she is, sh'd be down on her knees all de time, bleatin' de Lawd for all his mercies to a po' onworthy creeter,' put in Br'er Jenkins, a-rollin' up his eyes to de ceilin';

"Women whut wuks out of doir own home looks 'bout ten years younger an' has twise as many good clothes as dem whut wuks at home."

"'Humph!' 'spons I, 'hit looks to be lack hit takes nerve for a married man to set up an' prognosticate 'bout how noble he is for supportin' his wife, for of a woman what does de wuk of a family don't support herself I don't know who does.'

"'Even de Government don't rank a woman who don't do no wuk outside de house a self-supportin' woman,' says Br'er Jenkins.

"'Den,' 'spone I, 'de married women in dis country ought to git togedder an' git k axe an' go an' chop down dat Census Bureau into kindlin' wood, for I can tell you one thing, dat ef de wives was to ris up an' ax for pay for all dey does dat dey would lan' de husbands in de po'-house for to pay for, sho' Jack Robinson.

"'I'll let you know dat I ain't throwin' no fits of gratitude to Ike for supportin' me, for I considers dat I earns my board an' keep an' de few clothes dat I kin purchase on money I gits out of him fo' times over, an' dat I throws in de rest of de wuk dat I does des for good measure, an' because I'se sorry for him, an' is foot enough to have a eye to his comfo'ts an' slab-aided, bald-headed ole nigger'

"'Dat ain't no way to look at hit, Sis Mirandy,' says Br'er Jenkins, 'cep a man what pays de rent an' buys de vittles supports his wife.'

"'You'make me think 'bout Br'er Sim,' says I. 'Bre'er Sim was one of dese heah big talkin' men what was always a-discoorsin' 'bout woman bein' de weaker vessel, an' how she ought to be pertected an' cherished, an' how he always supported his wife, an' how accordingly she ought to look up to him, bein' as how he was de head of de fambly. After while Br'er Sim's wife died an' leave him wid a whole housetul of little chilien, an' he comes an' ax me whar he kin find a good woman to look after 'em, an' I recommended Sis Luellen.

"'After while he come back, an' he say Sis Luellen, she say dat she'll look after de chilien, but dat she ain't one of dese heah ail around genluses dat kin do ev'thing, an' dat whilst she's willin' to russ de baby, an' take keer of de two next chilien, an' keep her eye on de big chilien what is gone to school, dat she shotly can't do de rest of de wuk, an' dat he'll have to get somebody else to cook, so Br'er Sim axed me whar he kin git a good cook dat kin turn out sech big fos' wife did, an'

I says he better hire Sis Minervy.

"'Well, he go an' hire Sis Minervy to help Sis Luellen, an' in an' behole Sis Minervy say dat she's des a good cook, an' she don't believe in mixin' up trades, an' dat she ain't gwine to do nothin' but cook fo' dat big fambly, an' dat is enough wuk fo' any one woman, an' dat he'll have to hire a wash lady.

"'So Br'er Sim hikes back to me again an' inquires whar he kin find a good free hand washer dat kin turn out a job hat his first wife done, an' I recommends him dat Lucindy Sue is got a mighty fine hand on a shut, so he hires Lucindy Sue to help out Sis Luellen an' Sis Minervy, an' den one day dat he ain't got a button on his clothes, an' has to hold up his britches wid a nail, an' de chilien is all in rags, Sis Luellen an' Sis Minervy an' Lucindy my goodness gracious' wid all dem chilien to cook for, an' wash for, an' mend for, an' got no time to see none, an' dat he sho'ly will have to hire out de patchin' an' de mendin' ef he wants hit done.

"'Den Sim he comes to me an' says, "Sis Mirandy," says he, "I'se got a pet married again, for hit'll break me up if I'se not to hire out de wuk dat my wife used to do." An' den Sim he got married, an' his second wife took up his fust wife's job an' Sim went around tellin' agin how good an' generous he was support her.

"'Humph! De census talks 'bout five million self-supportin' women in dis country. I tell yo' dere's fifty millions, an' dere ain't a woman dat knows anythin' 'bout wuk dat ain't tackled de job of takin' keer of a big family on a little income.'"

Here Is the Sparkling Wit of Boston's Infantile World

Fond Parents Continue to Deluge Editor With Baby Humor and Philosophy.

A COMMUTER on a morning suburban train leaned across the aisle and greeted a fellow-commuter

"You know that four-year-old boy of mine," he commenced. "Well, he grows smarter and smarter every day. I don't believe in bragging, but I honestly think he's the smartest youngster in Boston."

"Why don't you enter him in the Boston Sunday American brain contest?" inquired a man in the seat behind, who was trying to read his paper, and a grin spread over the facial area of the passengers.

It was a pat and proper challenge.

The Boston Sunday American is on the trail for the smartest boy or girl in Greater Boston with a $500 building lot as a reward of merit.

Don't waste your time telling your neighbor that your boy is the smartest in Boston. He may entertain the same belief about his boy.

Children should be tabooed as subjects for discussion, along with religion and politics, if you want to keep your friends.

So don't talk to inappreciative persons. Write to the American and open your heart as wide as you please and brag. Willie up to the skies, sending along some proof of his wisdom, and see what the result is.

Here is what the other babies say:

FUTURE HAZY.

Olive's maternal instincts developed very young and at three she was a devoted mother to numerous dolls.

One day she said to me, "Mother, I can't decide whether I shall be a mother or a clerk in a candy store when I grow up."

A QUEER HOME.

My son George, three years old, hearing the hymn, "There's a Home for Little Children Above the Bright Blue Sky" sung, turned to me and said "Heaven must be a queer home without the mothers."

BUTTER, TOO.

My grocer had forgotten to bring the butter and we were short at supper time. My two little girls, aged three and four, at bedtime were saying their evening prayers. When they came to the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," Helen, the elder, added, "Please, God, don't forget the butter, but you needn't mind the stamp, as the marketman will send that."

NOT SO VERY GOOD.

While preparing a chicken for dinner the other day I remarked, "She looks like a very good chicken." My little four-year-old, who had heard me speak of the tough gravels, replied: "I think it is such a very good chicken when it did not go to heaven."

HE WAS THE CAT.

My cousin Henry, aged three years, was part of a group of children and could be heard telling the truth he stood in front of in a row and asked, "Who broke the lamp?" We all said no, and when he came to Raymond, he said, "Oh, Raymond, I saw it was the kitty-cat."

His father overheard and pretended he was going to punish the cat. When he saw that the cat was unable to get away, he gave it a little slap and said, "Now, Henry, I will punish you."

A HEAVENLY CRAYON.

One day, after a severe thunder shower, my [illegible] asked who in four years old, would be glad to play on the verandah.

I left him there and was busy in the house only a moment, when I heard a scream. Rushing to see what was the cause, I found him pointing to the sky, saying, "Look, mamma, look, God has been out to mark with his crayon."

I looked and saw a very beautiful rainbow.

TRUE PHILOSOPHY.

One day, when I was out with my little girl, she [illegible] keep pace with me but would fall behind. I told her if she did not come along that I would tell the police and they would arrest her. She said she did not care if I did. Then I said: "Wouldn't you feel bad to leave me?"

She said "No, if I leave you, you can do something bad and then the police can arrest you, and we can stay together in the same police station."

NO FUN SHOPPING.

When my little [illegible] was only a year and five months old, she was born October [illegible] took her into a store to buy him a hat that he got tired, and looking at [illegible] said: "Please lady, don't sit any and I skidoo."

WHO WILL CARE FOR ME.

A few days ago I gave my baby boy a spanking. He looked up at me and said: "I not your boy now, ma. I'm papa's boy now."

"All right," I answered, "I don't want a bold boy."

"Well, he says, "if you loss me, who'll take care of you then, ma?"

ANYTHING DOING?

My little niece, Kathryn, aged two years, whose parents had been telling her a good deal about God and Heaven, looked up to the sky one day and said, "Say, God, is there anything doing up there today?"

CELEBRATION ALL RIGHT.

Charles, who is four years old, thoroughly enjoyed Bunker Hill Day, celebrating in his own small way with a toy pistol, some caps and a horn.

The day following he begged for more caps, and I said, "No, dear, no one will celebrate to-day, and people would think that we didn't know that yesterday was the proper day."

During that night shortly after midnight there were one or two flops of fireworks, and next morning I overheard the following call from Jack to Charles:

"Mamma, mamma! wake up, wake up! I've got a surprise for you! Guess—guess what it was the bunker fairy put down here last night. You hear the angels ring, ding!"

Then a very sharp, pert rejoinder: "There mamma, listen! The angels [illegible] ground up near with a hammer and the fairy [illegible] Now, all I got—maybe I'll be able to walk it down now, will they?"

A YOUNG SCIENTIST.

Eugene is just four and a half years old and says some very clever things for his age. One hot day he was mixing a cracker with butter on for his supper, when he surprised me by saying: "Mamma, this butter is a liquid."

I asked him why, and he said: "Why because it is running off the cracker." Then after a moment, he added, "I thought butter was a solid."

ONE WORRY REMOVED.

After a [illegible] with her brother Paul, Olive asked me if brothers ever got [illegible] sisters. When I told her I had never known of such a case she gave Paul a withering look and said: "Thank Heaven! I haven't got but one to worry about!"

"DON'T ASK JOHN."

Our laundry man is in the habit of giving my baby boy a ride every Wednesday, and a cent which I have told him to put in the bank. Last week I said, "Well, Alfred, did you have a cent to-day?" To this he replied: "Now mamma, don't know. I was [illegible] Thank Heaven! I haven't got but one to worry about!"

MAMMA BITE?

Estelle, who will be three years old next October, was teasing the cat. I asked her to stop as the cat might bite her claws and scratch or bite Estelle. A few days after she happened to get a piece of ice that I had just placed upon the table, and I told her not to put it [illegible] the bottle again as mother might be cross.

She looked up at me with a questioning, baby gaze, she said, "Mamma cross! Mamma scratch or bite?"

CAT TOO PROUD.

When my little Louise was four years old, she enjoyed playing church. One day she was playing and had for her congregation a kangaroo cat and Jack, the dog.

She was very severe and looking at the handsome, proud cat, said, "Now, kitty, you will never go to heaven if you wear those feathers."

"BABY IN THE SKY."

When Frank was about two years and a half old his little girl was telling him how many brothers and sisters she had.

Frank said, "I had a little brother.

BUT ONE WEEK MORE FOR BIG BABY BATTLE

By Eleanor Ames.

The contest will close with the publication of next Sunday's five prize-winners.

Then all the photographs will go into the hands of the five women artists, who are kindly acting as judges, and the announcement of the most beautiful baby in Greater Boston, the winner of the grand $500 prize, will be made as soon as they have completed the really stupendous task which lies before them.

Only one week left in which to prove that your little Reginald or Gunnyera is the most beautiful child in Greater Boston.

One week—seven days—and the chance of winning a $500 nest egg for the baby is gone.

But did you ever realize what great works can be accomplished in one week? It not look at the world—it was created in a week. And if the world can be created in a week, the prize winning Boston baby has a good chance of being found in a week.

Nobody knows which of all the thousands of babies whose photographs have come to the Boston American will be the final winner. The last photograph received stands just as good a chance as the first. The opportunity to win will not be lost until the contest is finally and forever closed, and every hour may be as golden as the first.

Just a word of advice—advice that I've given so often that it seems worn threadbare. Please follow rules of the contest absolutely in entering the photographs in the contest. Write (1) baby's name, (2) baby's age, (3) baby's address, (4) baby's parent's or guardian's name, all plainly, somewhere on the photograph.

And remember that it is not the most beautiful child in Massachusetts, nor in New England, that is being sought, but the most beautiful child in Greater Boston, which means in that territory limited in a radius of about eight miles of the City Hall or the State House.

Many people are constantly asking when the photographs entered in the competition will be returned. Just as soon after the final judging as is possible—if the proper address has been furnished.

It is impossible in the face of the mass of photographs to be handled to set any definite return date, but the Boston Sunday American's aim at the start that the photographs would be returned—and they will be.

Send your pictures along by the hundreds.

The more the merrier. This is the last of the twenty weeks' competition, but it's as good as any of the others.

JULY DAYS BRING OPEN AIR GAIETY

Genial Summer Weather Booms Business for Park, Beach, Boat and Trolley.

GENUINE Summer, finally arriving on the scene, is giving the Boston public its rightful opportunity for out-of-door pleasure. The beaches and Summer parks are crowded daily Boston is blessed with many of these amusement resorts, nearly all delightfully convenient. Entertainment profusely arranged of music, vaudeville and other features adapted to Summer park conditions make them particularly inviting. Announcements for the beaches, parks and kindred places for this week include the following:

Wonderland

There is a monotony to the story of Wonderland nowadays, but it is a story of uniform success, of unaltered enjoyment, of immense crowds, of enthusiasm and of the keenest satisfaction and of great prosperity. The monotony was in the repetition of this to be desired state of affairs, day after day, during the pleasant weather of the holiday and the rest of the week, especially in the factor of the high class character of the patronage and of the entertainments.

Wonderland's attractions are veritably countless and he must indeed be difficult to please who cannot find more than one item on the long menu to make an otherwise uncomfortable hour on a hot July and August day pass pleasantly and in comfort, totally oblivious of the height of the mercury in the thermometer.

Excursions from various sections of New England are becoming numerous at Wonderland. Saturday the party of officers and members of the Waterhead Mills of Lowell enjoyed a flighting time. Among the choices were the motor farm, the animal circus, the Temple of Music, the 1907 exhibition, saw the boss in the broncho-busting contest and saw the great circus parade. Monday's parade during the afternoon will be well represented. Tuesday and Wednesday will each welcome a party from Worcester, and parties from Worcester, and others during the week will be in large parties. A party of twenty visiting musicians, Masonic People's chorus and Lowell Lyric Club, setting over Sunday in Lowell, Saturday, D. of P. of Gloucester, Thursday, Scotch to Dayville, etc. Also excursions A. O. H. from Lynn, Y. M. C. A. excursion from Marlboro and Hudson excursion, Friday New London, Ct., to Wonderland, and Saturday, A. M. Y. M. H. A. of Springfield, 1,500 in the excursion.

The great free circus acts this week will be headed by the Holzaver sisters, five handsome young women who have created a sensation at Wonderland by their artistic exercises and by holding daily sway over the long menu to make an other wise uncomfortable hour on a hot July and August day pass pleasantly and in comfort, totally oblivious of the height of the mercury in the thermometer.

MAYOR WARDWELL TO LEAD SUBWAY FIGHT AGAINST "L" ROAD.

"CAMBRIDGE MUST GROW"

Declares He Is Disgusted With the Elevated Plans as Outlined at Present.

WILL CARRY WAR FURTHER

All Sides to Be Heard at Public Meeting Next Wednesday at City Hall.

TO demand that the Boston Elevated Railway establish four subway stations in Cambridge instead of one, as the officials now plan, hundreds of prominent residents of the University City will attend a monster mass-meeting to be held in the aldermanic chamber at Cambridge next Wednesday night.

The Elevated and others who favor the one-station idea will be represented, but it is believed that the meeting will vote to carry the demand for four stations before the Railroad Commissioners.

Mayor Walter C. Wardwell of Cambridge is in favor of four stations, as is William Barclay Parsons, the noted New York engineer, who made a report on the question for the city of Cambridge.

Here is what Mayor Wardwell said about it in an exclusive interview given to the Boston Sunday American yesterday

Scores the "L" Road.

"I am very grateful to the Boston Elevated for condescending to stop in Cambridge at all. I am thoroughly disgusted with the proposed plan. I only believe that four stations are necessary for the new subway.

"All this talk about the surface cars being taken off, I believe, is nothing but nonsense. People are going to come to Cambridge and will not be driven away. With four stations the population of the city is sure to be increased as people will flock here once the subway is started.

"The people who are fighting for three stations demand one east of Columbus street, which is below Central square. I believe if a station is needed below Central square then most certainly one is needed above Central square, at Dana street. Here is a district which is fast becoming a large apartment house district. The people should derive the benefits of the subway as well as those who live below Central square.

"I will call a public meeting for next Wednesday evening, to be held in the aldermanic chamber at City Hall. Every one will have a chance to be heard. After hearing all the arguments I shall proceed my decision and go before the railroad commissioners prepared to fight for what I think is for the best interests of the citizens of Cambridge."

"The Cambridge subway shall be for the advance of the company and allow of its pushing, by means of surface cars, to outlying cities and towns beyond Cambridge, so that the company may compete with the Boston & Maine and the Albany railroad," is the argument of the Boston Elevated

Have 5,000 Signatures.

The 100,000 inhabitants of Cambridge think differently. A very active fight has been made by a citizens' committee who secured the names of 10,000 men of the city after four petitions, at Harvard square, Dana street, Central square and Kendall square. Ex-Mayor Augustine J. Daly has been a great factor in the fight for four stations. The report of William Barclay Parsons, the noted New York engineer, Mayor Wardwell's expert, also favors four stations, cutting out the one at Kendall square, signed by the citizens' committee, and substituting in its place a station at Sixth street.

A business men's committee with over 5,000 signers on their petition favor three stations, one at Harvard square, Central square, and Columbia street. The business men fear that if four stations are granted the number of surface cars will be reduced, and their business, therefore, will suffer.

The "L" will argue for two stations, one at Harvard square and the other on Massachusetts avenue, between Essex and Brookline streets. The cities and towns beyond Cambridge are all in favor of two stations, but the Cambridge people will fight hard for a subway favoring Cambridge people and Cambridge interests.

VINDICATED MAYOR URGED FOR SENATE

Chicopee, Mass., July 6.—The friends of Mayor Albert E. Taylor are urging him to reconsider his recent determination to retire from politics and make a fight for the State senatorship at the next election. Mayor Taylor is a Republican and will have little trouble getting the nomination if he will take it.

Several weeks ago the Aldermen voted to request Mayor Taylor to call in the State police to close several disorderly houses, said to exist in Fairview. Mayor Taylor considered this order not only a slap at the Chicopee Police Department, but at himself, and some time later announced he was out of politics for good. Now the Aldermen have rescinded their vote and the State police will not be called upon. This action is considered as a vindication for Mayor Taylor.

BLAME SPARROWS FOR WEAKENING OF STEEPLE

Hordes of Birds Tear Mortar from Between Bricks of Church.

Westfield, July 6.—The First Congregational Church has been greatly damaged by English sparrows, and it will cost hundreds of dollars to repair the damage already done. For years the sparrows have been pecking away at the mortar between the bricks, with the result that hundreds of the bricks in the steeple have been loosened.

The sparrows have their nests in the belfry, and in niches of buildings nearby. Evidently there is something in the composition of the mortar which appeals to them, for the mortar in other buildings in the vicinity has not been touched. The ecclesial committee of the church has taken the matter in hand.

"WORK—ROAD TO SUCCESS," SAYS DRAPER HEAD AT 85

Hale and Hearty, Bancroft Declares He Never Rests Till Task Is Ended.

"Early to bed, early to rise and plenty of hard work are the only reasons to which I can attribute my good health and age now," said Joseph Bodwell Bancroft recently, the age of eighty-five has come to him the head of the Draper Manufacturing Company at Hopedale. "I do not work on schedule. I begin early in the morning and cease when my work is finished."

Among business men and manufacturers he is recognized as one of the shrewdest and most capable citizens of Essex county, Hopedale or the State. In appearance Mr. Bancroft does not display a mite evidence of feebleness.

Is Alert and Watchful.

Daily makes his rounds through the Draper works, offers suggestions to the heads of the different departments and is at the head of the annual meetings of the corporation meetings, eager, alert and watchful.

When asked by the Boston Sunday American reporter to give some advice on regard ing himself, his habits and the secret of living to such a good old age, he paused for a second or two, and then, in a manner characteristic of a banker in full control, gray eyes, said: "Don't you think that there has been enough said about me already? I am afraid that the public must be tired of reading about me."

How is my health? Well, the best answer that I can give you is, I am here just as you see me. I don't look as ship or feeble, do I? No, I am well and have been ever since I can remember.

"Regarding my business life and the work I do at the Draper Company plant, well, I would rather not discuss that. You see, I make it a rule never to talk about my business. That I regard rather as a personal matter to myself and feel that it should interest no one but myself."

Occupied Many Positions

"I have lived in Hopedale almost all my life. I was born in Uxbridge in 1822 and came to live in Hopedale in 1847. I was first employed by the Hopedale Machine Company. After I had been with them for seven years At the July meeting of the company I was chosen president, and I attribute my good health and success chiefly to work. I work whenever I am needed and until that work is finished. I have always been a believer in the 'early to bed and early to rise' idea. And with a bow he answered many questions.

While it was officially given out after the election of the board of directors of the company that the cause for General Superintendent Draper's resignation was ill health, it is rumored, not contrary to the wishes of the other members of the firm, and, rather than abandon the plan General Draper tendered his resignation, which was promptly accepted.

LABOR

Notes and News in the Toilers' World

Labor Meetings to Be Held Here To-day

THE Rhode Island Label League Bulletin has made its bow to the public.

It is a neat little pamphlet and is printed with the object of creating a demand for goods bearing the garment makers' union label. The editors of the bulletin are well established in the labor line, one of the publishers being Frank A. Hayden, who is also the editor of the Labor Union Journal, and is entitled Labor Unions Do an Act of Justice to Women as for Men," by Boniface Hurtax, taken from the Boston American Queries of Boston, New England representative of the United Hatters of America, also writes interestingly of the Rhode Island label.

W. L. Marthis, president of the Rhode Island Union Label League, is editor in chief, and Charles H. Low managing editor. The associate editors are M. De Pasquale, J. K. Reynolds, Robert E. Sweeting, Joseph Kremper, Frank Bedard, James O'Connor and E. W. Sturtevant.

THE first number of The International Steam Engineer's Journal has been issued under the management of Frank B. Monaghan of this city. Mr. Monaghan is a member of Boston Stationary Engineers' Union No. 16.

Mr. Monaghan has commodious offices in the Winthrop Building. He is a veteran worker in the trades union movement in this city and has the best wishes of hosts of friends in his new venture. The Journal is the official magazine of the International Union of Steam Engineers.

THE passing of No. 45 Elliot street from a meeting place to a hotel awakens many memories in the minds of the older workers in the trades union movement. A dozen years ago the Central Labor Union held its meetings in Columbia Hall on the top floor of the building at No. 45 Elliot street, the name in the directory including the Typographical Union, Bricklayers and Bakers.

An interesting story of how the Central Labor Union came to move from there to Wells Memorial building is told by Secretary Henry Abrahams of the C. L. U. On complaint of the Electrical Workers' Union, a committee of three headed by Mr. Abrahams was delegated to see the janitor of the building. The committee reporting that no satisfaction was received, the C. L. U. voted to leave the building.

Copy of the local newspapers was then secured for printing a statement calculated to injure the property. The case was settled with the great interest. Secretary Abrahams being the star witness. The windup was that the paper was fined one dollar.

THE Central Labor Union committee is busily furthering plans looking toward the establishment of a labor temple in this city. Labor temples have been built in Lynn, Providence, Washington, Los Angeles, Toronto and other large cities and have been very successful. The local committee is securing information from these cities.

It is planned to have an auditorium large enough to accommodate the largest conventions that come to Boston. There will also be about thirty smaller halls for labor union meetings. On the top floor will be a large dance hall.

The street floor will be given over to stores. Several unions have signified their intention of taking quarters in the new building, and the plan is being unanimously accepted by labor men.

LABOR NOTES OF INTEREST.

Frank K. Foster is slowly recovering from a fractured knee pan sustained last Winter, which has kept him out of the labor field for some time, and it is hoped will soon be able to continue his various activities in behalf of organized labor.

President Arthur Gleason of the Boston Central Labor District Council, and Secretary Foster of the International Union of Steam Engineers, has established his headquarters at room 1, 201 and 203 Washington building, Tremont street.

The Typographical Union intends pruning a portion of its duties organizing to the shop chairmen and also the fair Boys in each room, so that union men and friends shall be known when purchasing may be by the label. Mr. when purchasing may be by the label.

Joseph F. Reilly, New England representative of the executive board of the International Commercial Telegraphers' Union, has left New York for Chicago, with Joseph M. Sullivan of New York, to confer with officials of the situation there. To-day all the operators belonging to the union in Los Angeles, Toronto and other Pacific coast business agent John F. Kennedy and John J. Regan, committee to secure information relative to the Atlantic City to attend as delegates to the international convention which opens there to-morrow. John H. Wakefield of this city was also elected a delegate to the convention as third general vice president.

James D. Coughlin of Chicago, chairman of the International Typographical Union laws committee appointed to consider establishing an old age pension fund, has left for his home in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Charles Orr has been chosen delegate from Boston Teamsters and Asbestos Workers' Union to the international convention to be held in Chicago, August 5.

The following labor meetings will be held in Greater Boston to-day:

TEN-DOLLAR AWARDS FOR PLEASURE-SEEKING "WONDERLAND TEN"

QUESTION — If a Snapshot Man makes ten trips and prints ten pictures for every trip and has ten dollars for every picture, how much at ten trips times ten people times ten dollars is real money?

Answer—A whole bunch of money.

(PHINAX) PHINANCE)

TALK about "Alice in Wonderland."

That was a great trip which Lewis Carroll's charming little heroine had in the land of the Cheshire Cat, the Duchess, the March Hare and the other fanciful creatures of that enchanted country.

But it was not a whit more interesting, in some ways, than the trip which the Snapshot Man of the Boston Sunday American made to a real Wonderland on the Fourth of July, to Wonderland at Revere, the big pleasure park.

Are You in the Group?

While the Snapshot Man did not meet all the queer people and characters whom "Alice" encountered, he did see a wonderful lot of people. Some of them were quite interesting types. How does the Snapshot Man know? Because he took their photographs and has the pictures to prove it.

Here are the pictures, the "Wonderland Ten," which Bostonians have been anxiously awaiting for the past few days.

Are you in the group?

If you are, then come to the Snapshot Man at No. 33 Summer street, Boston, and identify yourself. If you do this, the Snapshot Man has ten dollars for you. That's the secret of the interest this Wonderland trip held. It interested the Snapshot Man mightily. And it certainly interests you if you are in the group, or even if one of your family or friends is included.

"Snapped" People All Over the Park.

There was such a crowd at Wonderland, such a busy, ever-moving, ever-changing throng, that the Snapshot Man was simply swallowed up in the general number. So, maybe you did not see him when he was at work taking snapshots. But that is no slurn he didn't take your picture. So look over the "Wonderland Ten" carefully to make sure whether you are there or not.

The Snapshot Man took pictures everywhere at Wonderland. He snapped people resting on the comfortable benches. He took them laughing as they "Shot the Chutes" in the swiftly-gliding gondolas. He gathered them in as they watched in admiration the surpassingly intelligent animals in the Pony, Dog and Monkey Circus. He caught them in front of the Infant Incubators. He "snapped" here and there, all over the park.

Some people celebrate the Fourth by going out with a tin horn in one fist and a cannon-cracker in the other, making all the noise they can. The Snapshot Man took his celebrating out in "Snapping" people so he might pay them ten dollars apiece. It made a novel kind of celebration, but not a half bad one at that.

Little Joseph's First Picture

The Snapshot Man also publishes to-day the names of winners so far identified as the "Roxbury Ten," printed last Sunday. Besides the eight Roxbury winners identified, the Snapshot Man has one left over from the "Somerville Ten" of the week before.

This identification was made just too late to get in last Sunday's issue of the Boston Sunday American. This Somerville winner is Number 5, the cute little fellow in the white suit. He is three-year-old Joseph Leo Donohue, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Donohue of No. 15 Broadway, Somerville. This Snapshot picture is the very first photograph ever taken of little Joseph.

Among the most interesting of the Snapshot winners is Number 3 in the Roxbury Ten. She is a member of the Little Sisters of the Poor, that band of charitable workers which accomplishes such a vast amount of good among the unfortunate of our city. Owing to the well-recognized aversion to publicity which members of this organization entertain, the name of the good Sister is not published.

Nun's Award Devoted to Charity

The identification was made, but the ten-dollar check is merely sent to the Little Sisters of the Poor and not to any specified person. The money will, of course, be devoted to charity, which is an eminently fitting use for it.

This past week brings the Snapshot Man's journeys to a close, for the present at least. He has made ten trips and published one hundred pictures. He has had ten dollars for every one of the hundred people whose pictures were published. Very nearly all of the pictures have been identified so far. The Snapshot Man has had a splendid time on his journeys. He hopes that all his victims will be identified and thus round out the Snapshot scheme to a satisfactory completion.

SEUMAS MacMANUS, Gifted Author and Lecturer, ON ERIN'S EVENTS

WRITING from Mount Charles, in his "deer old Donegal," the gifted writer and lecturer, Seumas MacManus, holds up the mirror to passing events in the "Isle of Saints." Although he freely expresses the strong convictions he holds on Irish affairs, leaning strongly to the Sinn Fein movement, even those who differ with Mr. MacManus as to the surest course to pursue to attain home rule concede his intense devotion to Ireland, and to all that pertains to the welfare of those "at home" and the millions of her sons and daughters scattered throughout the world. To-day's article is another on the series being written by Mr. MacManus for the Sunday American.

By Seumas MacManus.

THE so-called home rule bill and its fate seems certainly to have fetched disaster upon Mr. Redmond. The people were a thousand times assured that the Irish Parliamentary party could not let the situation, and that the Liberal government was, if not their faithful servant, at least their friend till death." Mr. Redmond had given absolute promise, times without number, that the present session of Parliament would witness the tried and weary Irish people led over the Jordan, into the land of (parliamentary) promise.

Mr. Redmond, moreover, although he knew that the Irish Councils bill was a farce, did his best to prepare the country to accept it. He felt that he had to make good, and he made desperate efforts to lead his following to believe that the farcical bill was just the thing to solve the situation. But the people, who had patiently awaited so much, could not swallow such a wooden pill.

The people see plainly at the make-believe home rule has been followed by a despondency and disorganization in the parliamentary ranks. Even amongst the demolition members of the parliamentary party this is so. They following in the country is in a bad way.

"Quit Parliament," Cries United League Branch.

The South Leitrim executive of the United Irish League resolved to call upon the Parliamentary party to quit the British Parliament and adopt the Sinn Fein faith. At a meeting of the County Cavan executive the other day the most active member, Mr. Thomas O'Reilly, secretary to the executive, threw up his post, saying that he was wearied and disgusted with the inert policy which had been adopted by the Irish Parliamentary party, and he could have nothing more to do with them.

All the work they had done, and all the money they had forwarded for the support of the party at Westminster, he said, seemed only to have set their cause back. He had lost all faith in parliamentary politics.

Mr William O Brien and his section are triumphant. Several years ago O'Brien could have got, from a Tory government a very much better measure than had the home rule, Liberal government now offered Mr. Redmond. Yet O'Brien and his followers were drummed out of the party for asking consideration for the measure.

It is understood that Mr Redmond and his lieutenants feel sorest on account of the American following. For the last few years they have drawn enormous sums from faithful Irishmen in America, who had taken their word for it that home rule would be obtained for Ireland this year. If Mr Redmond had succeeded in forcing his following in Ireland to accept the Irish Councils bill, he felt that his American friends should thereby be appeased, and he made to believe that it must be all right. He was not, however, prepared for the result that has taken place, and which found him in a state of despair. Those among whom were now out in the cold. Disciples of "God helps those who help themselves" and the policy which, consequently, leaves the Irish people to help themselves if they can, and to Ireland what it is forced to cause them by means of a [illegible] struggle carried on by the people of Ireland, using no sin of Ireland, and utterly ignoring the British Parliament.

To Michael Davitt's grave in lonely Straide, County of Mayo, on Sunday, June 30 (to-day) will throng multitudes of pilgrims from all corners of Connaught, and even from far beyond its bounds, there to pay their respect to the memory of one of the purest-hearted and bravest of the patriot-martyrs. Michael Davitt was singularly courageous and honest in his patriotism, and it is well known that in his later years he was fast losing his faith in parliamentary methods and realising that nothing was to be won by fighting for Ireland on the floor of the British House of Commons. It is that everything was to be won, as everything had been won, by struggling for Ireland in Ireland's own valleys and on her own plains and hillsides—the faith on which the Land League fought and won its great fight.

Michael Davitt will long remain a cherished memory with Irish people; in his own country he is idolized. It is probable that the pilgrimage on June 30 will institute an annual pilgrimage, which will become one of the greatest events of the year in Ireland.

Unearth Mineral Wealth In the Mines of Ireland.

The great industrial revival in Ireland is showing itself in many ways, and not least in the development of mineral resources. Within the past half dozen years a number of mines of various kinds have been either opened or reopened in different parts of the country, as the copper mines in Boomsbeen, in the South; the gold, silver and lead mines in Inishowen, in the North, and a valuable coal mine at Ballycastle, County Leitrim. This latter is already exporting its output to the neighboring counties.

The other day a new seam of coal was discovered in it, eighteen feet below where the present working coal is obtained. The seam is reported to be a large one and the coal of excellent quality. In connection with these mines it is a good sign of the times that there is no delay in obtaining capital for their working.

Dr Douglas Hyde, for president of the Gaelic League, and, perhaps, the real leader of the people of Ireland, is now in his native land, where he is welcome. While in Ireland he will endeavor to give a fillip to the International fake which has been called "The Irish Industrial Exhibition."

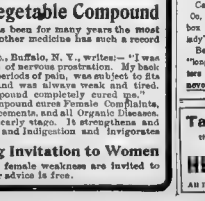
The royal party will visit the exhibition which up to the present has been woefully shy from lack of visitors. This exhibition was opened by the Duke of Connaught by the anti-Irish section in Ireland, and visitors from abroad who know not a word about it. The exhibition is not patronized by the Irish people. Neither of these are attending it in the throngs that were expected, and it is hoped that a royal visit to the exhibition will stimulate some the spirit of the lagging among the loyal ones in Ireland to go to it in its four gay walls forthwith. It is to be hoped that no visitor from America who has Irish interests at heart will patronize the anti Irish exhibition.

Exhibition Denounced by Irish Societies of London

A manifesto has just been issued on behalf of the Irish societies in London, calling upon Irish men and Irish women there to refrain from in any way helping or patronizing the Dublin International Exhibition, on the good ground that it must have an anti-Irish tone. The manifesto, in alluding to the fact that the Irish people are exhibiting at the exhibition with a view to securing a further share of Irish trade, therefore the exhibition is one which no Irish man or woman who has the prosperity of Ireland at heart should for a moment support.

The Irish societies of London manifesto are the Gaelic League, the Dungannon Clubs, the Cumann na Gaedhlan, the Gaelic Athletic Association, and the National Council of Ireland. It is also stated that Mr John Redmond and Mr. F. L. Crilly, general secretary of the United Irish League of Great Britain, had written to the signatories pointing out that the attitude of the Irish party and the League had all along been one of condemnation of the exhibition.

BACKACHE AND DESPONDENCY



MISS LENA NAGEL

Are both symptoms of organic derangement, and Nature's warning to women of a trouble which will sooner or later declare itself.

When you hear women say "It seems as though my back would break." Yet they continue to drag along and suffer with aches in the small of the back, pain low down in the side, dragging sensations, nervousness and no ambition.

They do not realize that the back is the main-spring of woman's organism and quickly indicates by aching a diseased condition of the feminine organs or kidneys, and that aches and pains will continue until the cause is removed.

made from native roots and herbs has been for many years the most successful remedy in such cases. No other medicine has such a record of cures of feminine ills.

Miss Lena Nagel, of 117 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:— "I was completely worn out and on the verge of nervous prostration. My back ached all the time. I had dreadful periods of pain, was subject to fits of crying and extreme nervousness, and was always weak and tired. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, and all Organic Diseases. Dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage. It strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache and Indigestion and invigorates the whole feminine system.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

BERLIN COUNCIL SHOWS DISLIKE FOR IBSEN

Vetoes Plan to Name Street After the Great Dramatist.

Berlin, July 6. The Town Council of Berlin has declined to honor the memory of the great dramatist Ibsen, by naming one of the streets of the capital after him. Their decision has, however, been vetoed by the Superior Council who do not love Ibsen.

It was only last year that the Norwegian dramatist's books were ousted from the municipal librarian.

ENORMOUS THEATRE HAT WINS IN CONTEST

Competition to Encourage Diminutive Headgear Has Queer Ending.

Paris, July 6.—A theatre hat competition in the interest annoyance of the fashionable society. One has just taken place at Mme. Rejane's theatre. The competition was connected with the scheme of encouraging small hats for theatre wear, and a brilliant assemblage of the most beautiful confections in headgear passed before the jury.

In spite of the intended encouragement for small hats the chief prize was taken by a lady with an enormous but entrancing structure of flowers and feathers.

AUSTRIA'S PARLIAMENT IS MIXED ASSEMBLAGE

Members Speak Eight Different Languages; Wear Floral Emblems.

Vienna, July 6.—Austria's new Parliament, the first elected under the Universal Suffrage law, is a polyglot assembly. When the deputies assembled to be sworn in they took the oath in eight different languages.

Political parties were distinguished by the flowers worn by the members, alike the historical red and white roses of York and Lancaster. The Christian Socialists wore carnations, the Social Democrats red carnations, and the Pan-Germans cornflowers.

POPE, AS HUMORIST, REFERS TO SCRIPTURE

Rome, July 6.—The Pope, who is well known for his good nature, was persuaded a little while back to have his portrait painted. When finished, however, the portrait did not suit him. When the artist showed it to him, she begged His Holiness as an additional favor to select a few words as an inscription. The Pope wrote, "John vi., 20." When the friends of the artist looked up the passage they found the words: "It is I. Be not afraid."

Do it Now! Don't Wait Until It's Too Late!

KEEP your body clean!

Most people are very neat and clean in their outward appearance, but how about the inside?

Are you clean inside?

And if not, how can you face the world with clean thoughts, clear intelligence, a fair, just, bright mind and get your full share of capacity for work and enjoyment?

The liver gets inactive the bile doesn't "work off"; the eyes get yellow; the skin gets dead like putty and pale like dough, disfigured with boils, pimples, blackheads and liver-spots.

There's only one solution to the problem: Keep clean inside all the time. That's the answer.

If you can not diet, or keep your mechanism going by proper exercise, take Cascarets, the sweet, fragrant, harmless little vegetable tablets, that "act like exercise" on your bowels.

A Cascaret every night before going to bed will "work while you sleep" and make you "feel fine in the morning."

Cascarets are sold by all druggists. 0c, 25c and 50c. The 10c size trial box is a neat fit for the vest pocket or lady's purse.

Be sure to get the genuine with the "long-tailed C" on the box and the letters "CCC" on each tablet. They are never sold in bulk.

"BOSTON'S GIGANTIC DEBT SHOULD BE INVESTIGATED." ---BRANDEIS.

Declares That Something Must Be Radically Wrong With City's Finances.

WANTS SEARCHING PROBE

Says There Are Men on the Investigating Committee Who Will Demand Such.

ALARMING DEBT INCREASE

Mayor, Undaunted by Report, Wants New Loan Order Passed by Council.

"OUTRAGEOUS," was the comment of Louis D. Brandeis, prominent member of the Public Franchise League and of the Good Government Association, yesterday, after he had read the report of City Auditor Mitchell, which discloses an alarming increase in the debt of the city of Boston

"It is certainly a matter to which the finance investigating commission should devote a good deal of investigation. There will be a few men on that committee whom the officials will not be able to hoodwink, and who will demand a full and searching investigation of the facts. Items that show a net debt of over $60,000,000, an increase of nearly $200,000 for the month of June, and the sum of $9,400,000 spent by city departments in five months, with a July draft of over $2,000,000 yet to be honored, are too enormous to pass by with a passive remonstrance. I have not yet given careful attention to the figures, but I know enough to know that something is wrong."

Mayor Wants New Loan.

On the very eve of a special meeting of the Council, called by Mayor Fitzgerald, to force, if possible, the passage by that body of the order authorizing a loan of $150,000 for the repair of streets, City Auditor J. Alfred Mitchell yesterday issued his startling statement showing that the city's present net indebtedness is the greatest in the history of Boston.

With an increase in the net indebtedness on June 30 of $150,963.63, the total net debt is now $69,215,437.20.

And still the Mayor wants more. Besides the million and a half odd dollars that he wants the Common Council to approve at the special meeting there is an other little matter, involving the expenditure of a few hundred thousand dollars for the water department, that it is hoped may find favor with the city law makers.

Taxpayers will study with close attention Auditor Mitchell's list of figures, for they have to shoulder this record debt, as well as the other debts it is proposed to pile upon this record.

Debt Is Piling Up.

The officials point with pride to the fact that, according to Auditor Mitchell's report, the gross indebtedness on June 30 had been reduced $426,500, but this was caused by the payment of $434,000 on account of city bonds and water debt during the month.

As though to offset this reduction in the gross debt, the city issued $567,000 of new debt last month.

Since the first of February, when the city year began, the net debt has risen $1,-[illegible]. The sinking fund on hand is $[illegible], and there are balances of $11,000 to $[illegible] July draft was $2,750,000. There still remain loans of $1,062,000 to [illegible] limit, and of $1,146,000 outside the debt limit that have been authorized, which have not yet been issued.

And so the debt is piling up, while the tax payer mildly wonders what voice he has in the matter.

RUN OVER BY TEAM, GIRL DIES OF HURTS

Everett Child Is Crushed by Express Wagon in the Presence of Her Playmates.

Ella McMahon, six years old, was knocked down and run over by a horse attached to an express wagon in Bow street, Everett, yesterday afternoon and suffered injuries from the effects of which she died last night. The child was the daughter of William McMahon of No. 183 Broadway, Everett.

With several of her playmates she was sitting on the curbstone in Bow street when a wagon belonging to the Everett Express Company and driven by Louis Schultz rounded a corner and bore down upon them. The McMahon girl became frightened and ran in front of the horse. She was knocked down, and the horse had the rear wheels of the wagon passed over her.

She was taken to the Whidden Hospital where it was found that she had suffered internal injuries. She died as a result of them several hours later.

Pastor Determined He'll Paint Church; Congregation Splits

Rev. John Norberry to Wield Brush; Parishioners Decry Maiden Minister's Plans.

Is it possible for the pastor of a church to turn painter and retain his dignity?

Is it proper for a minister to wield the brush to make his place of worship more attractive and spare the purses of his parishioners?

The congregation of the Pentecostal Mission Church, on Ferry street, Malden, is pretty well divided over the question—but Rev. John Norberry declared stoutly last night that the church is going to be painted and he'll ask no money to have the work done professionally.

"Just at present," he said, "it's only the paint I need and I'll pray to God for that to morrow.

"I did not know that there was any dissent on the part of my parishioners, but if there is any I'm glad to know of it and we'll let it come to an issue.

"In the four years of my stay here we have raised $20,000 for various needs, and I am not going to call for more. I do not think I would be right.

"So I think it dignified for a pastor to paint a church? I do not, but if the church needs painting as this one does it is my duty to do it. I have always found the angel does a long cost or an old suit and do the work myself. In my experience will not permit him to tax his parishioners. I feel the congregation has done enough for our need and asked for assistance, but not financial aid, Mr. Crup, one of my flock, has rendered his services and Mr. Norberry will also help me."

George F. Reynolds, one of the parishioners, is bitterly opposed to the pastor turning painter in public.

"I consider it very unfriendly," he declared, and I intend to denounce him. Many others feel as I do and we hope Mr. Norberry will give up his mind."

But Rev. Mr. Norberry says he won't

HUNT FOR GOLD TO-DAY; IT AWAITS YOU AT REVERE

"LUST for Gold Makes Bank Teller Steal."

This was the heading in one of yesterday's newspapers. To get $200 in gold to-day you do not have to steal from a bank—unless it happens to be a sand bank at Revere Beach

By the time the reader of this newspaper has probably seen and carefully considered the Buried Treasure section that was folded in the comic section. If you haven't, look at it. Read it carefully.

Then skurry for Revere Beach. In the sands, along the streets, under trees, in the shadow of many of the most patronized attractions, you will will find gold —gold pieces in the form of Twenties and Twenties

In addition to this wealth, there will be 500 tickets to Paragon Park. Some of these tickets admit to about all of the attractions of the park.

The gold and the tickets will be in envelopes and tin cylinders, each bearing a Red Dollar Sign

Besides the hidden wealth at thirty points there will be the thrill to add to the enjoyment of the trip to Revere

Look for Red Dollar Girl. She Has $50 for You.

The Girl with the Red Dollar Sign. Find her and she will give you $50 in gold

A young man who will hand you $10 in gold.

A messenger boy will hand you $5 in gold.

Of course everybody is looking for the Girl. When you find her you will find a real girl, young and pretty. She might have a copy of the Boston Sunday American in her hand—and she might not.

Very likely she will tell what this Girl with the Red Dollar Sign will do. And if you don't tell us she will be. She has the freedom of the Beach. You know where she is most likely to be found. Wandering around, and other attractions.

He on the qui vive. And when you find her, approach her and say gentle, but clearly

"Are you the girl with the Red Dollar Sign? It belongs to me."

"She'll give you the $50 without a moment's hesitation Do not get excited when you see the girl and get an impediment in your speech—if you do, somebody else is liable to speak first

Young Man Will Give You $10 If You Find Him.

The young man with the $10 in gold for you will be in a restaurant. When you get into the right restaurant,—and there are several at Revere Beach just walk up to him and ask

"Are you the man with the Red Dollar Sign? It belongs to me."

He'll hand you the gold ten-spot

That message is a $5 gold piece It is bound to be a day of intense excitement at Revere. But keep cool—just as cool as you can. You have a scat many chances. If you fail to get any of the gold, you can hardly miss the tickets.

Whatever you find is yours. Findin's is keepin's All of the gold will be hidden, as well as the tickets, regardless of the weather.

ROCKEFELLER IN GRIP OF THE LAW

Under Cross-fire of Questions Bares Facts Long Hidden by Attorneys.

"I bear no ill will toward any man, much less to officials of the government," SAID THE OIL KING YESTERDAY, JUST BEFORE HE RETIRED FOR THE NIGHT.

CHICAGO, July 6.—John D. Rockefeller surrendered before the law to-day He told Judge Kenesaw M Landis of the United States District Court that which the Standard Oil attorneys had previously declared that was none of the court's business and who had stated that the information would not be supplied

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana is owned by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. Mr. Rockefeller said so and he barred many other long-hidden secrets. For instance, he acknowledged that the New Jersey corporation, capitalized at $100,000,000, was in the habit of declaring annual dividends of about forty per cent.

In a court room crowded, while a mob of men and women ten times greater, was shoving and jeering in the outside corridors trying to gain admission, their voices rising high above the roar and din of traffic on the streets below, voices that he heard and wondered if they were angrily meant for him, the very richest man in the supreme figure in th commercial history of the world, sat for almost an hour facing a judge on whose countenance were read lines showing unyielding determination.

Hurries Home to Sick Wife.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller parted straight from what the world at large thought was a city of dreadful experience to the Standard Oil magnate He was a good luck to Chicago

The train left at 4:30 o'clock on to Lake Shore road, hurrying home to Cleveland to "mother," who is ailing

The poor health of Mrs. Rockefeller, it is said, was the only worry he had in the world and but for her he would prolong his stay in Chicago to visit the Standard Oil Company plants at Lake Forest and also the scene of his great benefactions, the University of Chicago

But I must go to Cleveland to see my wife," he said, emphatically. "If I do not she exhibits heartburn" But she is ailing, and I would not for the world have such an ailment to her I must hurry to her side at once"

Mr Rockefeller was in the drawing room of the sleeping car "Forestville," where he and his last luncheon in the metropolis was served. It was counting the morning and afternoon shifts of reporters, about the twentieth he gave in the day. Each of those interviews was given with smiling graciousness.

Through the day Mr Rockefeller gave snatches of interviews under all sorts of conditions. He gave them at the McCormick home in elevators, in motor cars and in the street When he was seated in his drawing room he appeared tired, but all did some interviewing himself

"What do you think of Chicago now you have seen it again?" a reporter asked him

"It's fine, is it not?" was the answer "Why I have known it since before you were born—since it had only 40,000 people. Its growth has been like a dream. And that is not all; it is only beginning to grow Its prospects are better to-day than ever before. It will grow by one of the wonders of its kindling, its spirit and its educational advantages," and the Oil King looked as though he had the university he had endowed in mind

Oil King Quails in Court.

The proceedings to-day demonstrated that democracy of government still survives, that a constitutional republic when justice prevails is in no danger of perishing Standing before a man of diminutive stature yet behind whom are the million citizens, this giant of the financial world, a man whose word could destroy the stability of a nation's commerce, who could bring peace and hunger to an empire, the president of the Standard Oil Company, paled, trembled and shook as if he were afflicted with palsy

When he first entered the court room he took a seat amongst the other officers of his company His attorneys were near. The table by him on which he placed his hat was covered with law books Mr Rockefeller took his new straw hat and put it on the floor at his feet. As he raised his head from this act, his eyes fell upon those of a criminal sitting ten feet away They had in them the wild, hunted look Listening, a few minutes later, immediately before his own case was called, the fugitive may have known or heard the impassioned, insistent plea for mercy from the court because it was about to pass sentence on one whose family would be left without support, a wife and children now without a penny in the world, and living upon the charity of relatives

No Pity for Criminal.

And so listening, bearing plainly the words of sentence on Martin Conda, for misuse of the mails, possibly a year in prison, Mr. Rockefeller's face mirrored

300 BOSTON TELEGRAPHERS MAY JOIN IN BIG STRIKE

A strike of more than 300 union telegraphers in Boston during the coming week became a possibility yesterday because of developments in the telegrapher's situation in Chicago

Dispatches received in Boston from Chicago last night indicated that a strike will probably be called there this afternoon.

The San Francisco strike starts the general strike sentiment throughout the country St. Louis is expected to follow Chicago and Boston is also in the list.

Shorter hours, better pay and conditions of the line form the basis of the differences between the operators and the companies.

In Chicago the grievance committee of the Chicago local met last night and appeared before the delegates from the Western Union and Postal companies. The refusal of the Chicago superintendent to meet irritated the men and they demanded immediate action

The granting of a hearing to the committee eased the situation. Later reaction in sentiment followed At late hour the operators generally feared strike

Crisis in Strike Trouble.

Deputy President Konsekamp is due in Chicago to handle the situation. The executive committee men, Reedy and Sullivan, are already here. The Chicago union has a membership of 2000. If a strike vote is had before the week is out they will give the company a final chance on Monday to reinstate William Main, an operator who was discharged because he had signed a list of the union's grievances in the San Francisco affair.

Locally a strike would affect not only more than 300 operators but would paralyze business and throw messenger boys, clerks and others out of work. The Boston men will watch with interest the action taken in Chicago to-day

MOTHER AND BABIES FACE FIRE DEATH

Fire, which broke out early to-day in a tenement house dwelling, No. 6 Thurston street, Roxbury drove all the inmates to the street and resulted in narrow escapes from death of Mrs. Sonora Kuna and her two children

Mrs. Kuna, her eight-year-old daughter, Martha, and her six-year-old son, August, were asleep when the fire started Smoke filled the room, which they lay, and they were overcome Policemen and firemen assisted them to the street.

The fire is supposed to have been started by a man in the house smoking in bed The house was occupied in a neighborhood in which there are many tenements, and the alarm gave rise to grave fears of damage amounting to several hundred dollars

FIND BOY DESERTED BY PARENTS STARVING

There was a pathetic case in the South Boston Court yesterday when Patrolman Skelton of Station 6 and Agent Mann of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children brought six-year-old Stephen Gunbres before Judge Fallon. The patrolmen told of finding the boy in a cellar at No. 41 Athens street. The boy had not eaten for three days. His father and mother deserted him two weeks ago. The policeman, the agent and the court took one boy to neighbors, had him fed and clothed, and then took him to Agent Mann Judge Fallon ordered the boy to the Harrison Avenue Home for Destitute Children.

Governor Orders Inquiry Court To Try Training Ship's Captain

Complete Probe of the Deserting Cadets' Charges

ENTERPRISE ON WAY TO THIS PORT

TO face charges which have been made against him by twenty-five cadets who deserted their ship at New London because they were served food which they claim was unfit to eat, Captain William F Low, U S N., is on his way to Boston on the Massachusetts training ship Enterprise.

The troubles which caused the boys to leave the vessel and come to Boston are to be investigated by a board consisting of Brigadier General William M. Devine, surgeon general, Brigadier General James G. White, commissary general, and Commander William B. Izdgar, assistant naval inspector general.

Governor Chooses Board.

The board was appointed by Governor Guild yesterday within an hour of the time the striking cadets, led by Senior Cadet H. B. Green, marched on the State House and told their story to Rear Admiral George F. F. Wilde, chairman of the Massachusetts Naval Training School, and endeavored to have an interview with the Governor.

The Governor would not see the boys, but he has promised those who represent them that there will be a complete investigation, and that if, as they allege, they have been served improper food, the persons responsible will be dealt with.

Before the board was appointed a telegram was sent Captain Low by secretary F. Stanhope Hill, ordering the Enterprise back to Boston at once.

Enterprise on Way Here.

In the meantime a telegram came to the Nautical Commissioners from Captain Low saying that he would forward a full report of the trouble with the boys to them at once.

The Enterprise should reach Boston this afternoon, and probably the investigation will be begun to-morrow.

The boys, who left the vessel at New London yesterday, decided to go to Mrs. Low, wife of the commander, who pleaded with them on the wharf to return to their ship, that the vessel would do as soon as they had received a promise of better food.

The cadets all like Mrs. Low, but she could not assure them that conditions would be improved.

Turned Down by Wilde.

When the boys reached the office of the Nautical Commissioners yesterday morning they were finally admitted to the presence of Rear Admiral Wilde.

"We came sir," said Senior Cadet Green, speaking, "to place the case of the cadets, who have left the Enterprise, before the board of poor food, before you."

Rear Admiral Wilde raised his hand and said "I cannot hear anything from you. You must report to Captain Low on the ship, and if he sees fit, then I will give you a hearing."

The Rear Admiral refused to hear further arguments, and the boys left the office, determined to wait outside until they could get an audience with the board.

But the Governor sent word that he would not see them, and they went to their homes.

Detained on Board.

"If we can't get satisfaction from the Governor we will turn our uniforms over to the State and never return to the Enterprise," said Senior Cadet Green.

The cadets who are in Boston are: All those in the still crew in a row, the highest prize would leave her if they could get it. Those who agreed to the recording Cadet Green are: C. W. Simons, F. A. Leonard, F. B. Hall, C. P. Wood, H. L. Wood, E. B. Peetz, C. A. Smith, G. W. Hird, J. C. Bonnell, R. C. Watt, J. S. Cooper and E. Gildersleeve.

The cadets who went to the State House yesterday are: H. W. Bassett, H. Master, H. D. Green, J. Rose, Robert H. Bonnell, A. W. Smith, Kenneth B. Bierne, Mitchell, Montgomery, A. Bonnell, B. Daniels, H. W. Hammond, A. Morse, A. B. Keith, Jr., James McWilliams, A. R. Walker, T. F. Teubner, E. S. Rose, S. P. Osgood and C. E. Blatchford.

Appointment of Board.

Boston, July 6.

His Excellency Curtis Guild, Jr., Governor of Massachusetts:

Sir—In view of the present situation at New London concerning the Massachusetts training ship Enterprise, as reported in the press regarding the quality and quantity of the food and the causes thereof, granted the cadets, the commissioners hereby request you to appoint a board of inquiry to investigate the same.

Very respectfully,
George F. F. Wilde,
Robert S. Dixon,
John Read,
Commissioners.

The governor's reply is as follows:

Gentlemen—I have your communication of even date suggesting a board of inquiry to investigate charges of improper food on board the training ship Enterprise.

In response to your request, I hereby appoint and I have this day appointed a board of inquiry consisting of the following persons, to wit: Brigadier General William M. Devine, surgeon general of Massachusetts; Brigadier General James G. White, commissary general of Massachusetts, and Commander William B. Izdgar, assistant naval inspector general of the United States Navy.

I shall ask you to give to this court any information of any character that may be in your possession or under your control. If they so desire, I believe it would be for the best interests of the fund on the ship itself at some accessible point in Boston harbor.

Respectfully yours,
CURTIS GUILD, Jr.

The political aspirations of Mr. Whitney are not highly approved by his mother. She has the idea that his business responsibilities already enough without adding politics to them.

Judge Questions Oil King.

Judge Landis leaned forward and put a question. His snapped like the closing of a pocket knife.

"Mr. Rockefeller, have you any official connection with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey?"

Both Attorneys Rosenthal and Miller were on their feet with objections] overruled. They argued that there was no cause before the court, overruled. They insisted that the question was imperti nent; overruled. Then the attorneys sat down. Judge Landis turned to the witness again, who now answered in the affirmative.

And then, in the parlance of the sportsman, "a fox was jumped."

The confusion caused by spectators at this period desiring to draw near to the court railing became annoying. Mr. Rockefeller's voice was not loud, his speech was faltering, his sentences long, but answers given after slow deliberation. Judge Landis could not very well hear. Turning to the marshal, he said: "Let there be less noise. Clear the courtroom if there is further disturbance."

Answers Almost Whined.

As question after question was put to the witness, he replied without hesitation and always with the added dignity of speech to the court as "Judge Landis" or "Your Honor." That went with his every answer. It had almost a whining echo. When he was asked if, besides the production and refinement of oil, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was engaged in business, his reply came with painful slowness. He said: "I should say generally speaking, Your Honor," and then as if fearful he had not been explicit enough, he repeated in a voice a trifle louder, "I should say not, strictly speaking, Your Honor."

It was brought out by Judge Landis that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns or has owned at one time or another a majority of the stock of the Indiana corporation in which the corporation was fined $29,240, and that the [illegible] had [illegible] the [illegible] parent institution had earned the stupend ous sum of $178,000,000. CHILD'S WEAKNESS BARS BIG FAMILY

Much Misery Occasioned by Enforcement of New Immigration Law.

The new immigration law which went into effect on July 1 is responsible for considerable suffering, through the steamship companies not giving its provisions proper attention before it went into effect. Ships are coming to America ports every day which sailed before the new law took effect, but whose passengers were embarked under the old regulations. As a result many immigrants who would probably have been landed under the old law are being debarred, with all the misery attendant upon deportation and beginning anew in their old homes, after having sold all their possessions at a sacrifice to pay their passage to this country.

A particularly distressing case of this sort was brought out by the immigration officials in the examination of two steerage passengers on the Canarder Saxonia. Nils Christensen, a Dane, with his wife and six children, were among the Christiansen surrendered his lease of a farm in Denmark, sold what possessions he had and started for this country, intending to settle in Iowa, S. D., where he has relatives. One of his children, Greta Marie, aged fourteen, was certified by the physicians as being weak minded. Under the old law the parents could have secured bondsmen to guarantee that the child would never be a public charge and the whole family would have been landed. The new law makes such guarantees debarrable. The father, in this case, will be obliged to return with the girl. The mother and the other five children cannot remain unless the father does, for without the help of the family all would probably become public charges.

800 PARADE TODAY IN ITALIAN FETE

North End in Gala Array—Band Concerts Mark Observance of Annual Feast.

Boston's Italian colony is wearing its most gorgeous dress today in honor of the annual feast of the Sorrista Maria Santissima Assiuta Christmannum and the several big societies are vieing with each other in lending the annual event its most color this year.

With pretty colored arches on the principal streets of the colony in the North End, aided by a generous display of red and white streamers and Italian flags for background, the feast of King Emanuel of the Irish are observing the feast with pomp and ceremony.

Wearing full regalia, the principal society, members of the Fratellanza Italiana, will attend the solemn high mass to be celebrated at the Church of St. Leonard of Port Maurice, on Prince street at 10:30 o'clock. This will be followed by a parade of nearly every fraternal organization of the city. The line of march will include all the principal streets and will terminate in Prince square at 5 o'clock, where the parade will disband.

The procession will be headed by the Italian band of Boston, which will render a concert at the square. The band is composed of the following musicians: A. Bassi, conductor; G. Ippolito, L. Jovino, R. Ippolito, V. Mazzeo, G. Cagginello, D. Antonelli, A. Cagginello, Destefano, M. Lanzo, A. Cagginello, D. Amato, M. Dinardo, A. Cagginello, Bacco, L. Bianco, G. Bipesa, V. Vlucco, G. ASKS DIVORCE FROM PASTOR DALRYMPLE

Worcester, July 7. Rev. Charles H. Dalrymple, formerly pastor of the Main-st. Unitarian church, whose home was the scene of a sensational elopement with his housekeeper May Lyon, H. Worcester, caused a sensation here today when a libel for divorce by his wife Ida Lyon Dalrymple of Milford, on the ground of desertion, was made public. Mrs. Dalrymple is now in Providence.

W. Riley, and is prosecuting. In the first meeting of counsel it was learned that the couple were married at Milford in 1884, and that they have had a family of two children, Leonard Irving, West Boylston, twelve, and Howard Milford, ten.

It is the charge of her husband with criminal intimacy with Miss Lyon, and for the custody of her children, that Esther Gregory, of Hopedale, will ask.

Miss Wesson, the young woman who in Mrs. Dalrymple's libel was a former of the minister's household for a number of years. She was employed as a housekeeper.

Her home is in the city of Gardner, where she was graduated with honors from the high school. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Wesson, the latter a clergyman and pastor of the Methodist church. That was before he became affiliated with the Unitarian faith.

SIEGEL CLUB TO REPEAT DRAMA

So great a success did the Henry Siegel Dramatic Club score with its presentation of "Pygmalion and Galatea" recently, when it gave an entire production of the drama, for the benefit of the Children's Ward of U. S. S. of South Boston, that it will be given another performance.

The club, which is composed entirely of men and is an exclusive organization, turned out a company of amateurs that is unusually clever in legitimate work.

In the cast are Miss Ethel Hall, Miss Gertrude Worthy, Miss Gertrude Lapearl, Miss Mary McKinney, Miss Laura Marks, Miss Emma Lapearl and Miss Lucille Hall. A. S. Arrowsmith, P. H. Kelly, M. Brownell, Chester Cotton and Ed. S. Jackson.

TRIES TO "HOG" ICE-CREAM MATERIALS

The Company of Georgia, the ingredients of ice cream, is charged with having attempted to monopolize the ice cream materials in the county and with refusing to sell supplies out of mill for thirty days. It also tried to engage all the ice in the county and the dairy goods in the merchants of Nokesville and Bristol, in which to ship the cream.

LEPER SMUGGLED INTO BALTIMORE

Baltimore, Md., July 6.—Young Mark Cohen, a leper, has been dumped into Baltimore by the health officers of Harrisburg, Pa. When the Cumanan reached here he bought a steerage trip ticket and was back in Harrisburg, while the health officers there were still congratulating themselves on the success of their plan to get rid of Cohen. Cohen, it is said, had been found in the Delaware river, and when fished out was found to be a leper. He was then fumigated make inquiry private or of the further purposes of it is not made.

Powers Are Interested.

It can also be noted that other governments with fleets enrolled at a very early date to add commendation to their battleship squadrons in the East.

As dates go, the sailing of the fleet's movements are now a little interesting. It may be recalled that the board of which Admiral Evans is now the head met the plans to Secretary Metcalf on the 10th day of June 18, the assistants to the wife of Secretary and to each other. Admiral Evans was the guest of honor at a few hours before Secretary Metcalf left for the east.

Following a conference with Roosevelt both Mr. Newberry and Admiral Brownson will discuss the matter further with Rear Admiral Evans in New York.

Rest After Magdalena Bay.

It now develops that Admiral Evans soon was hurriedly summoned to Oyster Bay on Thursday afternoon, after the President learned that Secretary Metcalf had heard his now famous Fourth of July promise to the people of San Francisco and Oakland that he would bring the fleet around for their celebrity. To prevent Admiral Brownson's visit to Sagamore Hill to-day being given any particular significance as the President deemed an opportune moment to have Brigadier General Allshire the new superintendent general of the army up to review his organizations as well as a few others, who enjoyed luncheon with the President.

Negotiations are under way between the State Department and the Mexican Embassy looking to the purchase by the United States of Magdalena Bay for the use of the lower California, if necessary, in order to secure control of the magnificent harbor at the lower end of this Mexican possession.

The negotiations in this highly important transaction are in the hands of Secretary Root. For several days as past he has been sounding the Mexican authorities on the proposed purchase.

Ambassador Creel of Mexico has assured Secretary Root that his Government entertains the proposition with favor.

There are a number of reasons why Mexico would be willing to part with this harbor, providing it fell into the hands of the United States.

Secretary Root will visit Mexico in September, and, when he confers with President Diaz it is expected that the terms of the sale will be agreed upon.

Harbor Fortifications Ordered.

The Pacific plan does not end with the dispatch of the ships and the Mexican purchase, however, and the remaining details may be expected to be carried out in the shortest possible time.

Such plans for the immediate fortification of the harbors of Honolulu and Manila and the steady improvement of the ship building and naval stations on the Pacific coast are a part of the plan, the secretary of the navy will lose the Pacific Coast stations to strengthen the needs of the western coast, whenever they be made public on Thursday the intention to keep the ships in Pacific waters.

To Make Navy Respected.

The naval experts here say that many of the vessels which are destined for the West coast are going there to stay. With that prospect agreed upon it is expected that the United States will have in Philippine waters not only the great cruisers Washington and Tennessee, but perhaps half a dozen of the best battleships. In other words the movement is being made to inaugurate a new policy—that of making the United States respected for its naval power on the Pacific as well as on the Atlantic. As heretofore pointed out for the American by naval officers, there is no immediate need of a fleet on the Atlantic coast at present itself.

The condition of the coast defences, which are far behind at Honolulu, Pearl, Longupo and Manila is almost perfect on the Atlantic coast. The 12-inch coast defence rifles are capable of piercing the best armor at a distance of 6,000 yards, and every one of the Atlantic ports can be mined and otherwise protected at very short notice.

Dewey Proposed Scheme.

It was this fact which led Admiral Dewey and his advisers on the Naval Board and on the Army Board to propose the bold plan of transferring the whole floating power to the Pacific, an indefinite term, without that expression recommend lubordous in the extreme. The President asked the opinion of the Naval Board, he got it, and has evidently adopted.

The plans were well considered and digested by the President and the Army and Navy and State Departments before they were adopted.

War Talk Is Revived.

War with Japan will certainly result in the dispatch of reinforcements to the war fleet in the Pacific, is the opinion of many naval authorities in Washington. Officers of the army and navy are forbidden by regulations of the service from discussing the subject publicly, but among themselves they are outspoken in their opinion to-night.

The revival of war talk has called the attention of the authorities to the fact that while there are upwards of a hundred or more Japanese in the United State navy, there is not known to be one American employed on the ships of the Mikado.

It is said that the President told Root and his other cabinet advisers that he would not permit the Japanese to force this government to a position of irritation; that he proposed to let the "Yankee" have their way until it was a question of national honor with the United States, and that when that time came, it would mean war.

BOYCOTT OF AMERICAN GOODS THREATENED BY JAPANESE NEWSPAPER

Tokio, July 8.—A report from New York that President Roosevelt had officially confirmed the despatching of sixteen battleships to the Pacific produced little commotion here. Some are inclined to read between the lines either a sinister motive on the part of a certain section of Americans directed with marks against Japanese, or the machinations of a third power which is trying to benefit from the quarrels of others.

A boycott of American goods in Japan will be the result of the present dispute between the two nations unless their differences are settled in the near future, according to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, newspaper. It declares to-day that the present crisis started a week ago by the fulminations of commercial rivalry on Pine Street. Roosevelt and American business organizations to correct the evils Japan complains of in the United States, show the intention to be ready with a boycott if necessary.

The American yellow agitator, Japan has reached an almost hysterical stage in approaching," it says, "and declares that the fear of the Japanese is the outcome of the San Francisco troubles has caused the desire to boycott American goods in Japan to grow.

PREPARATIONS FOR DEFENCE OF MANILA ARE BEING HURRIED

Manila, July 6. — Unusual preparations for the defence of Manila and the naval station of Olongapo and Cavite have followed the discharge of all Japanese laborers and naval experts employed by the United States in the navy yards. Rear Admiral Hemphill and General Wood have co-operated in putting the stations and city defenses on a "war basis" as rapidly as possible.

The discharge of the Japanese has created no end of commotion in the city and while there are denials that any extraordinary preparations for emergency are underway, there are many in high official life, who openly say that the United States is not going to risk a surprise from any quarter.

The naval developments here are regarded as especially significant in view of the recent order for the transfer of the Atlantic fleet to the Pacific coast. Added to this, two companies of army engineers were hurried at night to Olongapo

JOHN FLEMING AND JOHN MAHONEY.

JOE NICHOLAS—REV. THOS. I. GASSON, S.J. AND JOHN FRANCIS

PRIEST PILOTS SONS OF FOREST

SHOWS HUB'S WONDERS

The Rev. Fr Thomas I Gasson, S J the dignified president of Boston College, is extending the hospitality of his wigwam for the coming quarter-moon to his young Indian brother, Joe Nicholas, and his young Indian cousin, John Francis.

These Indian relatives of the distinguished priest, full blooded members of the Passamaquoddy or Openangae Tribe, a branch of the Etchemin Nation, arrived yesterday afternoon from their home at Pleasant Point or Sibayk, in Maine. After they had been assured that Elevated trains positively would not fall off the high track and had, with some difficulty overcome their drink water through a straw they began to feel a little more at ease in the new hunting grounds of the race of the Bostonians.

It may be some peace of this city who know of Father Gasson as the head of the Indian race, and a race of much note, to hear that he has by right as relatives, forsooth, a whole tribe of them, cousins, aunts, uncles and one brother.

Made Member of Tribe.

Many years ago, when the Passamaquoddy Indians were supreme about the shores of Passamaquoddy Bay, near Eastport, Me., the troubles between the American colonists and the English came to an issue. The Passamaquoddies chose to side with the colonists, on account of which there has been much friendly feeling ever since between Passamaquoddy and Amesbury.

In this later-day the Passamaquoddies are progress of the Holy Catholic church have Sisters of Mercy, stationed at the convent at Pleasant Point, Me., are spite Head Sisters, and the tribe are The Indians are Christians. They wear civilized garments, live in many ways as one of the forest as they were a hundred years ago. They cling to their simple life and are ignorant of modern life and the thousand and one wonders which we accept now as every day affairs.

Last Summer Father Gasson conducted a retreat at the Pleasant Point Convent. He met Chief Neal Lola of the Passamaquoddy Tribe. At Neal Lola's request Father Gasson gave a little mission to the tribe. The in fer returned the courtesy by making Father Gasson a member of the tribe. Fourteen year old Joe Nicholas was elected a member of the tribe to receive Gasson. Twelve-year-old John Francis became his first cousin. The others took no friendship of aunt, uncle, cousin and so on.

Greeted Indians at Wharf.

Father Gasson invited Joe and John to visit him in Boston. So the Indian lads came on yesterday. They were by train to Eastport, Me., taking a trip on a steamboat from the line that runs to Eastport. The boys embarked on a flock on yesterday morning and arrived in Boston at 4:30 p. m. yesterday.

Father Gasson was at the wharf to meet his Indian relatives. With him were three boys who are serving as guides to the Indians during their stay in Boston. They are John Mahoney, 15 years old; John Fleming, fourteen years; Joseph Scanlan, seventeen years, and John Mahoney, fourteen years.

In charge of their host, the Indians walked up Hanover street to Adams Square. The Elevated trains amused them. At the first train came roaring along overhead, Jr. Mr. Lamb has been actively associated with church and charitable associations for over twenty five years. The boys knew what a jail was and they swiftly ducked behind Father Gasson's back till they saw from his face that he was no great danger to them.

A passing automobile left them eating confectionery at the fast travelling car. They were not a bit invitation to drink a glass of soda. The strange in the glasses puzzled them. After cautiously watching to see how others did the Indian boys took the straws in their mouth and managed, with some thinking, to draw the liquid up and then let it go down their throat.

After the soda experience, the lads boarded a trolley, another sensation for them, and rode with Father Gasson to the Boston American office, where they were to be specially entertained.

There they will be taken through the building and will then come to the Boston American office and see how a newspaper is published. Other sightseeing trips are being arranged for them.

MONEY WASTED IN PAVING AND CLEANING BOSTON'S STREETS, DECLARES FOX

Expert Finds Drastic Abuses; Says Street Railway Should Help Pay Cost.

Money has been wasted in the paving of Boston streets.

Money is wasted in the maintenance of this paving.

Money is wasted in keeping the streets clean.

The street railway companies should be made to pay for the cleaning and repair of one third the width of Washington street, Columbus avenue and other wide thoroughfares.

These important facts have been discovered by Expert Richard Fox, who was brought here by the citizens committee two weeks ago to investigate the conditions of our streets.

And Mr. Fox has only begun his work. Drastic reforms will be recommended by the Chicago man when his investigation is completed.

Staging rebuke for someone's wasteful ness will be implied in his findings.

Mr Fox's survey of the Boston streets is not as a Twilight Zone of the trade promises to be far-reaching and officialdom is watching with anxiety for Mr. Fox's final word on the conditions as he finds them.

Points Out Glaring Faults.

In an exclusive interview with a Boston Sunday American reporter yesterday the Chicago expert pointed out the glaring faults in the Boston system—or lack of it.

"I have investigated the conditions in Portland, Me., Providence and South Boston and have made trips to Charlestown and East Boston and have noted facts which are to be presented in my report to the committee," said Mr Fox.

In a general view of this city, I find that the West End and South Boston districts are up to the standard, in the respect that they are kept clean and that the general street section scheme, but, take for instance, Columbus avenue, and Washington street, here are streets seventy five feet in width which are paved, and at a waste of money

"Speaking off hand, the paving of these streets costs in the vicinity of three and a quarter cents per square yard, and the cost of maintenance is about five cents per yard for a year, and added to this is the cost of cleaning which is the cost per year. These streets there has been paved about twenty two feet of width, which is needless, as the centres of these streets could be paved for four in grass plots and the street car tracks run in these portions and then there would be twenty five feet roadways on each side.

Grass Plots Economical.

"In addition to this, these grass plots should be taken care of by the railroad, and the city would profit thereby, and, if in the future the city needed the room, the grass plot could be utilized and paved accordingly.

"I have been investigating and have taken hourly figures on the tonnage and traffic that is passing over the streets of the city and find as far as I can state the pavement best suited for these streets, but I will say that there is still room for improvement. The granite ones are best, but are noisy. Asphalt and wood block paving are slippery, while macadam is out of the question on streets given up to heavy traffic.

"As the traffic has the most to do with the dirt on the streets, I can figure as soon as I have thoroughly covered all sections of the city the amount that should be expended for cleaning the streets.

"I am looking at these conditions as the average taxpayer would see them and am called in the same capacity as he man would be that goes to the hot iron man and investigates conditions in his office, when the employer wants to know just how his money is going.

"The individual taxpayer has heretofore been one who has paid his taxes without a murmur, and when asked, he has considered that the city has had the use of his money and has forgotten the incident. Now this man is of citizen is waking up and wants to know what the city officials are doing with the money."

BLOWS WHISTLE AND IS ARRESTED

Steam Engines Must Not Toot in Mill Valley, Says Ordinance of Town.

San Rafael, Cal., July 6.—Steam engines must not whistle in Mill Valley. Just because he ordered a freight engine to break the quiet valley echo with its voice, Conductor Hartah was taken prisoner by the constable this week and within a day or so there will be a trial before the town recorder to determine just what penalty a man should pay for causing a locomotive disturb the peace and quiet of the valley.

This infraction of the town's novel ordinance occurred at midday when the crew of the freight train desired to call out a number of the crossing.

It is understood that the railroad officials will attack the ordinance on the ground that it is discriminatory as to the rights of "tooters."

LEAGUE WILL NAME STATE TICKET TO FIGHT IN FALL CAMPAIGN.

Leaders Denounce B. & M. Grab and Standard Oil at State Committee Meeting.

WILL WAR ON CORRUPTION

Spirit of Perfect Harmony and Thorough Earnestness Mark the Proceedings.

VICTORY IS PREDICTED

Attitude of Legislature on Important Measures of Past Session Denounced.

THE State Committee of the Massachusetts Independence League held a well attended and interesting meeting in the League headquarters, room No. 348, Old South Building, yesterday afternoon, and the announcement of future moves was cheerfully voiced by representative members from all over the Commonwealth.

Sentiment in favor of waging a vigorous fight in the Fall campaign was overdone on all sides. It was unanimously decided to nominate a full State ticket of Independence League candidates and to perfect organizations in every city and town to carry on the battle.

William Lincoln Lovell was selected by the members to act as chairman of the Independence League State Convention. By unanimous consent, the selection of a date for the League convention was left with the executive committee.

Legislature Denounced.

Vigorous denunciation of the Legislature's attitude on important measures of the past session was uttered by several State committeemen.

One of the most important of the matters acted upon was the adoption of a resolution offered by Mr. E. Prescott of Malden. It provided that in the several districts in which the present system is in operation in the Senate, candidates who have signified their intention of opposing the present occupants shall, at the Independence League caucus, be called upon to subscribe to the principles of the League Senatorial Committee.

The rules for such the State organization shall be governed in the future were adopted after considerable research after the plan William S. Osgood, the present State committee chairman, be given the power to appoint a chairman and four members at large of the committee on resolutions for the State Convention.

League Banquet Planned.

There seemed to be a spirit of perfect harmony throughout the meeting. The speakers, alive to the realization of the fact that confronts the State Committee, entered upon their labors with an earnestness that was productive of speedy results.

It is the Independence League will soon be given a strong impetus in its work in Western Massachusetts, as arranged by Secretary George W. Curtis of Springfield when he outlined a plan of the League banquet to be held on July 24 in Springfield. Representative citizens from the four western counties have already signified their intention to be present.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman John L. Bates of Needham at 2:45, and the Pierson resolution was quickly adopted after an interesting discussion of its relative merits.

The Independence League caucus, it was voted, will be held on Sept 23 and the same date in cities and towns that have adopted the joint caucus law, or so called Australian system. This means that in other cities and towns the League caucuses will be held on the first named date.

B. & M. Grab Flayed.

The Boston & Maine New Haven merger was flayed in speeches by committee men. The Boston & Maine monopoly, its methods to crush competitors and control legislation and the antagonistic stand of the Peters Legislature towards measures beneficial to the people were censured.

Robin M. Richards, of Dedham started the speech making by ridiculing the Boston & Maine road for its stand in regard to the merger. He said:

"Anything you want to know about the Maine railroad will have to be obtained in New York hereafter if the merger goes through."

President Tuttle will probably be made a baggage master or a flagman, or sell tickets through the Maine plums, he thinks. But he will have to seek him, the mighty head of the combination will be the mighty head of this State do not arouse themselves in time.

Worcester Has Hopes.

William Crosbie of Worcester said:

"As a whole, the people of Worcester are very quiet on this merger because they have been told by newspapers to believe in Mr. Mellen's promises that millions will be spent in improving the railroad terminal and facilities there. They seem to think that Worcester will be the New England railroad centre and Boston the suburb.

"The Independence League is making magnificent strides out my way. It is being talked up on all sides and I know of plenty of influential citizens who are tired of corporation control of both old parties."

War on Corruption.

George E. Gookin of Somerville said:

"I am employed by a corporation and with me are four men, two who have always voted the Democratic and two the Republican ticket. Now all four are going to vote with the Independence League the ball.

"There is a mountain of encouragement in sight on every hand in Somerville. Voters who have been cowly affiliated with the old parties are going over to us by standards. They realize that a true and earnest war on corruption will be waged under our banners.

"I predict that this will be a wonderful year for Independence League politics in the old Bay State. There will be such a turnover in the Fall that the old party leaders will stand aghast."

Three Issues Named.

Thomas L. Hilgen of Springfield said:

"The Independence League is the only party that is not afraid to stand up for its principles. We have got the argument, the best Legislature furnished us with the ammunition. We will win with that combination.

"I have been a member of the Independence League ever since its organization. We have three fine issues to put up to the people and they will win many votes from clear thinking, reasoning people. They are the Standard Oil domination of this State through its legislative influence, the Boston & Maine and New Haven merger and the anti discrimination bill.

"I have been battling with the Standard Oil Company for years and nobody knows better than I of its trick-ster. They seek to grasp everything or crush what they cannot control.

"When the people find out that they are paying six or seven cents more per gallon for oil in this section of the State than they are out my way, they will vote for the Independence League, the only party directly opposite and antagonistic to the trusts."

Attacks Trust Methods.

Thomas E. Finnerty of Clinton strongly attacked corporations and their monopolistic methods. He said in part:

"The monopolistic control in this State is almost complete on every commodity. The Standard Oil Company set the pace, the others followed, some.

"Do away with special privilege and you remove the stimulant for graft. Equal rights against every corporation. Special privileges constitute the food upon which these monopolies operate.

"The life insurance investigation in New York was productive of a little good to the people. It is true that the stench

CYCLING — BIG RACE AT REVERE TRACK

DOVES WIN NIP-AND-TUCK STRUGGLE FROM REDS, 7 TO 5, AND GO INTO FIFTH PLACE

BY I. S. CLARK.

Under the scorching rays of Old Sol the Doves and the Reds battled in the Turkish bath weather yesterday at the South End grounds and the Hub boys signalized their return to the old sod, setting the wily Reds back by the score of 7 to 5.

Even the close similarity of the figures in the score fails to tell the nature of the conflict which was played at the same boiling point as the weather.

That the contest did not go to extra innings was a surprise, as the score kept fluctuating throughout and it was a case of anybody's game the minute a man was out.

At one stage of the argument the Terrapins had the lead by two runs, with half the distance to the goal reached, but a long rally in the fifth put Dutch Reis and the score was tied up.

Hanlon Wanted Game Badly.

But there was something in the playing of Tenney's men that appealed to the fans, and confidence never waver[d] that they would get the game [illegible] Manager Ned Hanlon waved [illegible] and never missed an [illegible] after it was seen [illegible] he gave his [illegible] box material, and used three [illegible] during the afternoon, and he even had the temerity to pull the wizard, Jake Weimer, off the mound after Jake had come in home run.

After the Reds drew up even in the seventh Tenney decided that Jake Dorner was barely to get trimmed if he couldn't, and quickly called Jake to the bench, telling to take command in the pinch.

"Cy" was right there with the proper ammunition and won the last two rounds out to the satisfaction of the fans.

There was more than ordinary interest in the game, as the rivals settled for ownership of the head of the second division and the Reds were [illegible] forced to vacate [illegible] who intend holding it [illegible] can get higher up.

The 8,000 fans who came and sweltered through the long [illegible] high esteem in which the new president is held and they were wise to the fact that there would be some hanging out on the diamond. They got [illegible] as [illegible] the sleuth stuff such a wind [illegible] almost forget the heat.

Plenty of Batting in Game.

There was plenty of batting and it came at the right time to make runs, and there were few disappointments forthcoming for failure to make good at the proper moment.

The home players were on their toes from the bell, playing with a dash and display of form that won the loyal fans in the outfield, and they showed to better advantage when some sharp inside diamond practice came into play.

The perspiration rolled off Gus Dorner as if he had been in a bath, but he never gave any signs of wilting. He made his record post forget that there was an hand to [illegible] on the crest of the [illegible] and his arm and some of the star variety, and they were able to handle the job of doing the Reds.

He could probably have gone the entire game and won out, but it was better judgment to give him a relief considering the strain of the heat waves, which were [illegible] ealing

"Del" Mason Started to Pitch.

"Del" Mason was the first pitcher started by the Reds, and he was passed out at the end of the third inning when the Doves had put three runs in a bunch over the pan. Jake Dorner, the clever southpaw, was then called in the breech, and considering his reputation and all, [illegible] to clean up batters he could not especially promising

Right of the reel came a couple of runs, as the locals began to meet the ball without trying to knock it out of the lot, but Jake was allowed to remain till the seventh was over and four runs in all had been collected. Smith, who replaced him, only pitched the eighth, and the Doves did not have an even chance to score up to [illegible] got Mclean at second. Kruger filed out.

There was plenty of sport in Boston's third act there was something doing every minute. Brown, the first up, hit a fast one towards second that [illegible] down but could not handle. Bem was a little slow to get his mail bag and was called by Big Jack McLean.

Dorner was next up, and from the start there were no expectations of any scoring when Bridwell was given a free walk. Tenney hit safely, filling the bases, and banged a hot one through the diamond to Lowdell, scoring Bridwell. Then Tenney taking third.

Beaumont drove a sizzler at Mason that glanced off his glove and Huggins made a frantic grab for the ball, but was beaten by him. Both Tenney and Reis [illegible] the pan, Reis to go to third on the throw, but Burke closed the inning with a poke to Moran.

Reds Drew Even in Fourth.

The Reds drew even in the fourth, when Mowrey reached first on a bunt, Oswell marching and David Burke to second. He hit to Brain, who headed off Mowrer and drove him back to second where Reis was standing and was bowled out at [illegible] Mowrey had the right to the base. Huggins lingered [illegible] Reis and Brain on the attempt to steal, Sam threw high and Bitchey went up in the air to [illegible] it, but Mowrey scored. Huggins was run out on a throw to Brain.

Weimer went in the box in Boston's half of the fourth and walked Ritchey. Brown was safe when Weimer fumbled his bunt, Dorner advanced, [illegible] singled, scoring Ritchey and Tenney both [illegible] to the [illegible]

The Reds scored the score in the second, with the bases filled on Huggins' pass, followed by McLean's two-bagger.

Then the Doves put two runs over in [illegible] its half by a combination of three hits by Tenney Brain and Beaumont, aided by a sport throw to first by McLean. The score.

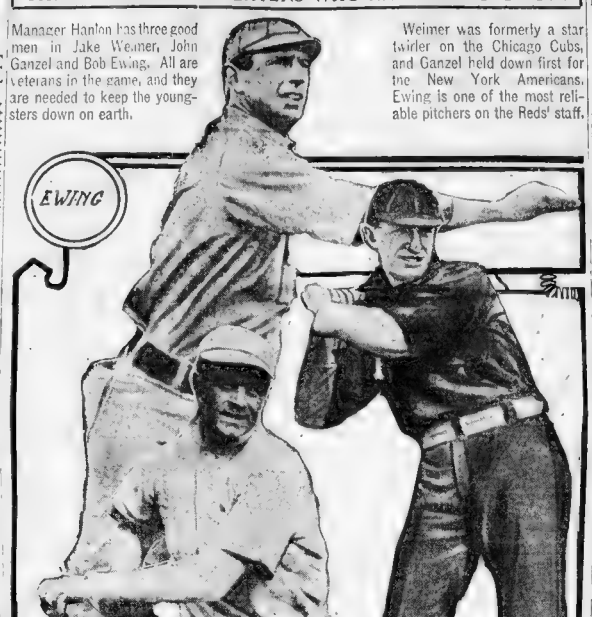
YACHTING — FIFTEEN-FOOTERS RACE AT HULL

THREE CINCINNATI PLAYERS WHO ARE MAKING GOOD.

Manager Hanlon has three good men in Jake Weimer, John Ganzel and Bob Ewing. All are veterans in the game, and they are needed to keep the youngsters down on earth.

Weimer was formerly a star twirler on the Chicago Cubs, and Ganzel held down first for the New York Americans. Ewing is one of the most reliable pitchers on the Reds' staff.



EXPERTS BEGRUDGE MAY SUTTON PRAISE

English Tennis Followers Say Her Game Was Not Brilliant.

London, July 6.—There is a noticeable flavor of "sour grapes" in the comments of British tennis players on the winning of the world's championship for women by Miss Sutton, the California champion. While the American woman has just demonstrated her superiority in striking [illegible] drives, here [illegible] surprise from spectators at her final match with Mrs. Chambers, former holder of the title. Eng lish experts begrudge her only faint praise. They insist Miss Sutton's play this week is [illegible] than in the past two seasons, when she played here, and that she is losing her [illegible]

Miss C. M. Wilson, one of the British experts, voiced this opinion in an interview with the correspondent of the Publishers' Press, after her own defeat at Miss Sutton's hands. She said:

"I did not think Miss Sutton nearly so good as on previous visits. Hitherto she has beaten us all by her powerful driving, and accurate passing along the side lines. This year she has forsaken driving for volleying.

"Miss Sutton is not nearly as good at volleying as half a dozen of our players and her drives have lost a great part of their power.

"However, she has one advantage over all of us. She is very strong physically and her stamina enables her to wear most of us down. Stamina rather than skill has counted with her in winning the champion ships, as her play is not nearly as dangerous and effective as last year."

B. A. A. WILL BACK H. P. WARDWELL

GRAYS BEAT ORIOLES THREE OUT OF FOUR

Cronin Proves Puzzle to Baltimore, While His Teammates Hit Some.

Baltimore, July 6.—Providence made it three out of four here today and increased its lead over the Orioles. Cronin had their guessing at the bat and when they were at their positions there was a good deal of guessing too, mostly of the wrong sort. On the other hand, the Cronin players seemed inspired with [illegible] Cronin [illegible] and [illegible] pitching, pulling off about everything in the shape of inside baseball that they attempted.

Pete Jenkins drew first honor, McConnell batting safely, getting to second on a sacrifice and scoring on Burrell's bad throw [illegible] Hall's fielder's choice when Clark bounced him to him. Abstein worked the squeeze play, batted toward first, and as no one covered he was safe beside scoring McConnell.

The Orioles' only run was given them by Crandall, who let the chance to retire the side roll between his legs, making the final score 6 to 1. The score:

CHICAGO 1, ATHLETICS 1.

Chicago, July 6.—Chicago and Philadelphia battled to-day for thirteen innings and then the game was called on account of darkness with the score a tie, at 1 to 1. The Chicago team scored a run in the second inning and not another was added to it [illegible] Both [illegible] Eddie Plank, the crack southpaw, was on the mound for the Athletics and pitched a fine game, but it was his grand work in the pinches that saved him from defeat. Roy Patterson pitched the first nine innings for the Sox and Frank Owen took his place when McFarland batted for him in the ninth. The Sox were especially anxious to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

BOXING FITZ TRAINS FOR JOHNSON TROTTING EXCITING RACES AT SPEEDWAY AMATEURS MANY TEAMS WANT GAMES SHOOTING

ALTRO L. LOWERS MARK FOR SPEEDWAY COURSE BY TROTTING 31 SECONDS FLAT

By Edward E. Cogswell.

At the weekly matinee of the Dorchester Driving Club yesterday at Franklin Field speedway, the grading, Altro L., in the initial heat of his race with India Paris, lowered the trotting record of the course from 31¼ seconds to flat 31 seconds.

H. L. Thayer, owner and driver of the Altro gelding, in this way not only superseded Fred Crehan, H. A. Preece with India Paris, who previously held it, but also Shadrach, who previously held it.

In the 2d heat Altro L. went to a break at the quarter pole, but, in the remaining half he was steady as a clock, in fact, he had so much speed that it was impossible for Preece to keep India Paris on his stride the entire length of the route.

Quite noticeable it was how Thayer has improved in his driving in the past few weeks. Altro L. is not naturally a hard trotter to get the hang of, and for that reason Thayer is very fortunate in having been able to buy him a couple of months ago. When the nag and he became a little more acquainted the race in which a world of interest would be attached would be between him and Jane Reston's trotter, Tom Flynt, over the Harlow River speedway for the speedway trotting championship of Greater Boston.

Wilkesbrino Had Soft Time.

Contrary to expectations, Wilkesbrino had a soft time carrying off the bale ribbon in the fast pacing event, Al. Bay receiving his second defeat in thirteen races this season. He was away off his true form, even bothering greatly when scoring by breaking, which was opposite to his ordinary stride. Then there was Bunker Hill in with the two contenders, and he was unable to go "high, low, jack or the game." In some of the heats he danced around at the quarter pole while the others were finishing.

But Furbush gained a blue ribbon if he did Al Bay did go down to defeat as he had many a thing to his how in the trotting event. Lassie, well entered in her contest off the reel George Draper had excuses in the detest of La Gazelle, saying that she was not worked at speed since her last start here, as the track was in such of the heats all she wanted to do was go into the air.

C. C. Coyle with Tom Drew were newcomers to the matinees, and what he did to his antagonists was a-plenty. Why, from the time Starting Judge Wales gave the word of W. L. and Oakland Shing did not know which way he went, he fairly outclassing his field a city block. The race committee, however, have their eagle eyes on him, and in the future he will not be apt to find such easy picking.

Sunrise Scooped in Two.

Sunrise scooped in a couple of heats over the track to make the spectators think one more would finish the race, but then the latter got to going and cinched up the third and fourth heats in straight time.

Then E. S. Harris wore an anxious look before the fifth heat was called, started from the drop of the bat, though flag was in length in the good, and caught on to the heat and race, but R. Ivo Coe got worried when he was left, tapped his gelding with the whip, with the result Quivera lost a break caused by unnecessary interference.

Billy Wiles had the most speed in her event, but was unable to overcome second mistake. After that she held her field safe in all points.

The return drive along the speedway is pending consideration and is provided for, but not now. Lowell, 17 to 10, of Old Home Week. It would be a good scheme for the commissioners, or whoever has the authority to see that the speedway is opened on holiday days. BARBARA WINS RACE AT SOUTH BOSTON Y. C. REGATTA.

The second series of races for the Monday Boston Y. C. members was held yesterday over the regular club eight-mile course. The yachtmen had light breezes, but some sharp contests resulted, and there was considerable to do in the judges' tents. A golf contest had also been held, but the races were run first, but in fresh and shifting winds, and there were challenges about it even the second leg of the course was under way.

In the class for cabin boats it was a neck and neck race between the Tycoon, Gertrude and Etta. On the first circuit of the course the Gertrude and Etta were tied, but on the last leg the Tycoon came to the front and just nosed out her rivals. Less than a minute separated the three boats.

In class X for sailing dories the Elias Brown F. had a big lead over the course on the first round, but her skipper slipped a lot of kelp on his centreboard, and it helped the Barbara in taking first prize.

The Kittredge, a thirty-footer, won the first class sailing yachts by a big margin. The results:

RUBE WADDELL WILL BE TRADED BY MACK

Detroit, Mich., July 6. Before leaving Detroit for Chicago Connie Mack, of the Philadelphia American League Club, announced that he was through with Rube Waddell, his former star pitcher, for good because of his conduct on the ball field in Detroit Friday afternoon when he pitched pathetically. Mack, it is said on good authority, is now negotiating with Clark Griffith for the disposal of Waddell, and it is said the deal stands more than a fair chance of going through. Just what Griffith is going to give in return for Waddell is not given out, but it is said he will give several players.

Dygert was sent into a game against the Tigers Friday and when the Detroit crew had a chance to win it Dygert fired him and put in Waddell. Waddell having nothing to lose did not exert himself in pitching, but loafed them over and the Tigers piled up a run. Waddell was taken from the task after seven innings by Mack, but he walked to the bench box and repeated his performance time and again. Mack was boiling up and after the game he decided that he had enough of the Rube.

Mack has threatened to get rid of the wild fellow, but each time Waddell promises to be good and Mack keeps him.

COACH RICE MAKES HIT AT COLUMBIA

James C. Rice, coach of the Columbia crews, who made such a success of his first year with the New Yorkers, has signed a contract for a term of three years to take charge of the local college oarsmen. Rice also has received an advance of $500 over what he was getting at Columbia this season.

The announcement that he has been engaged is very pleasing news to the host of Columbia graduates and undergraduates. Rice was engaged originally through the work of a new rowing club committee. The members of it are heartily pleased at the change they have managed to bring about in Columbia rowing.

Bowden Wins Over Evans For School Golf Title By Score of 2 Up and 1 to Play

In the final match for the interscholastic championship at the Wollaston Golf Club, Montclair, George L. Bowden of Brighton High School defeated the present holder of the title, Brice Evans of De Meritt School by the score of two up and one to play.

Throughout the day Bowden played a steady, consistent game, winning entirely upon his merits, while Evans was extremely wild from the tee and could not find himself from a worse bearing by his beautiful fair work will both. Both players were a little off the game at the start, but soon recovered and played up to form.

Bowden Gained 2 Holes Lead.

Bowden gained a lead of two holes at the end of the morning round, and though Evans brought this to the home at the start of the afternoon round, Bowden soon jumped into the lead again by steady golf and was never headed.

Evans won the first hole in five, for he was well up in three, while Bowden topped a drive and on the next got out of bounds necessitating six. Both played pretty to the green and halved in four, as was the result. The next hole was halved with fours, but Evans squandered the sixth lead by winning the fourth hole, 5 to 6.

Bowden then took his first lead of the match by a good drive and a beautiful mashy shot, enabling him to get the hole in 5, one stroke under par. They halved the ninth hole in 5, and Evans got the seventh by his fine work, and Bowden added his approach dead for a 4, while Evans' approach dead for a 5, while Bowden took a 6. At the ninth Bowden got away well, while Evans topped, giving him the hole 4 to 5. This left Evans two up at the turn.

Coming in both players were in better form, especially Bowden. They halved the tenth, and Evans took the eleventh. At the twelfth hole, Evans was into a bunker, giving Bowden the hole, 4-6. The thirteenth was halved in par, and Bowden took the fourteenth in 3. Evans taking 4. After a half at the fifteen, Evans drove under an apple tree, and after borrowing a right-handed club of Bowden played a shot of 150 yards. He lost the hole, however, by poor putting, 5-6. Bowden missed a 3 at the seventeenth, but won. He also won the eighteenth by a pretty 3, leaving him 2 up at the end of the first eighteen holes.

Evans Got Two of Three.

Evans started the afternoon round by getting two out of the first three holes by steady work. He drove into the sand trap on the 22nd, however, and Bowden took the hole. Evans missed it on the 23rd by overcoming Bowden's lucky carom from the fence out of bounds into the course. Bowden took the 24th by a well-played second to the green. Evans' tee shot went into the woods. The 25th and 26th holes were halved in par each, and Bowden took the 27th in 4 to 5. At the 28th both drives were topped, but Evans played an easy put for a half, giving Bowden the hole, 5—6. At the 29th the drives were well away, and a half in 4 was the result.

Bowden got away the longest drive of the match at the 30th, but Evans ran down a long put for a four. Bowden holed a nasheo shot for a five at the 31st, but Evans kept his nerve and ran down a putt from the edge of the green for a four, which took the hole. Bowden drove beyond the green at the 32nd, and Evans played a beautiful putt for a four. The remaining holes were halved, giving Bowden his match two up and one to play. The score follows:

VANDERBILT RACE WANTED IN NEW JERSEY

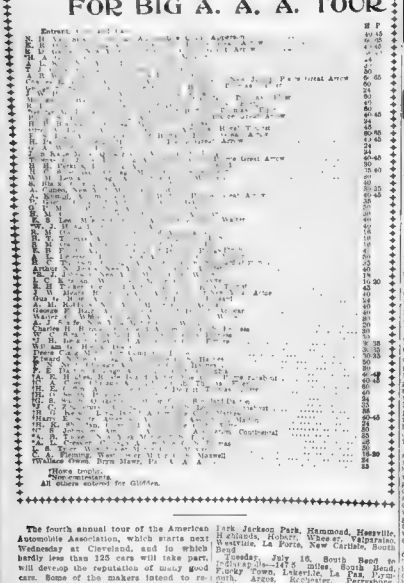
ENTRIES RECEIVED FOR BIG A. A. A. TOUR



The fourth annual tour of the American Automobile Association, which starts next Wednesday at Cleveland, and in which hardly less than 125 cars will take part, will develop the reputation of many good cars. Some of the makers intend to remain out of the annual contest this year, and theirs will be the loss. The entry list up to date includes nearly ten cars of one make, and this concern will be especially well represented in the contest.

Many other makers are entering the competitive lists with the annual tour this year, and six of cars hitherto unknown will become well known before the close of the journey. The A. A. A. tour provides every opportunity for the advancement of the merits of a new car, and for that reason there are found in the entries a great many cars hitherto unknown. Against these unknowns the cars of reputation must take part, as no record is to be found out of the list they have previously made. Many of the well-known makers now have withdrawn their entries from the annual tour and other contests with feel the loss of prestige in securing sales for their 1908 product, as buyers are discriminating and prefer those cars known by their work actions to those cars and by their success in great competitive events.

Cars Sold by Reputation.

Many a car known to be good has proved its competitive worth in competition against other cars while many a car known to be good has later attained position through failure to enter the lists and prove its worth in the contests of the season. It is undoubtedly a fact that as a result of the contests of this season hundreds of orders for 1908 cars have been taken away from those makers, who in their own estimation occupy a too position and did not feel that competition was necessary to prove the value of their goods. In addition to the value to be obtained from open competition for individual cars, there is the general value which accrues to an industry from the growing of such a healthful and wholesome pastime as a kind of passenger car every type of car under conditions possible and seemingly impossible.

The four days' tour covers a well populated country and the distance of each day is not time in which to be passed over. The selected territory is such that the most numerous cars of the Board has been selected with a view that even cars cannot escape the stand at the hands of the judges after a varied route over hill and dale, through mountains, plains and valleys without good roads.

Itinerary of Tour.

The complete itinerary of the tour gives the names of the cities to be visited, the distance between each, and the time allowed for the journey. It is as follows:

GLIDDEN TOUR ENTRIES WILL REACH 125 AUTO NOTES Edited by J. C. KERRISON. ENDURANCE BAY STATE A. A. RUN TO KEENE NEW CARS

BAY STATE A. A. TEST RUN TO KEENE AND BACK PROVES A BIG SUCCESS

BY J. C. KERRISON.

No less than twenty out of the field of thirty-three starters finished the 210 miles endurance race run of the Bay State Automobile Association last evening with perfect scores. This is a most satisfactory and pleasing result, emphasizing as it does the fact that motor vehicles are no longer pastimes or experiments, but rather are reliable, substantial and thoroughly efficient means of pleasure, or for that matter commercial purposes. True, there will be, of course, accidents in the run, devoted to pleasuring purposes can thus wise be applied to those of the commercial vehicle.

Run a Severe Test.

The 210 miles I ur was by no means a "joy ride." It was an absolute and severe test of engines and men, a test such as few never have to meet. Except, New York, and that known of the cars should finish without having suffered in addition for the accident of motor ends, the cunning of some pages or even trifling things as is apt to assume in an ordinary run of four specified miles for the motor industry of America.

Of the above thirteen that felt by the way side of both properly speaking the Craig-Toledo was the only disappointment, for it ran home by the end of the run in the pink of condition and right to the front. But because the four wonderful running qualities cost its point owing to the wonderful system of checking and time keeping adopted by the committee, and the consequent slight circulating of those who, of that cause failed. Partridge drove the car with admirable judgment will not a skip or a flaw, and unwaveringly, the car acted as perfectly as did any other.

Coburn Unfortunate.

Another unfortunate was Ralph Coburn, who drove the Maxwell. He was penalized for a late arrival at the Dublin control, like true sportsman as he is, he did his part to make up such time in assisting Roswell Bishop's Buffum Bug being out of a ditch and was rewarded that the other who good work of a car would be for perfect score making to a loss of points through a clerical error. Four points are the penalty for the loss of a car delayed to rescue the party in distress.

E. P. Bates in the two cylinder Jackson was another car to suffer. While trying out in order not to bump into a stone he ran into a ditch, and sprung both left-hand wheels, so that they wabbled around and threatened to separate themselves from the axles every other minute. Yet despite that fact Bates pluckily kept on the tour and finished with the others early last evening. Of course he lost points, but he proved conclusively that the engine was there with the power and ability. Although hard upon in the running gear.

Harry Marsh, with the single cylinder Cadillac, was up against it on the troubles, control, while Keller, with the American was decidedly unfortunate. Not only were tires against him, but he lost headway through going into a ditch and getting other serious troubles.

Bay State Forty in Trouble.

The Bay State Forty, driven by Drisko, and the Rainier were the two star unfortunates. The former started out by the car got dead and twenty miles this side of Dublin it was pulled from its troubles by a tow car and the men on the Worcester car were got away to run a race and was down and out. Price got as far as N. and was loaded for Swansey on the return, when he, too, struck into a soft spot. He got into the mud over his axles, and the united effort of some four hours were necessary to bring him back on solid ground once more. Of course, he was too far in the rear to expect to make a good showing.

The American Mors and the Arrow were both penalized a few points for making use of some extra tires, while Lewis, in the Berliet, had no honors by breaking to get a control on time, although throughout the run he made not a single adjustment.

Honor Men of Run.

So much for the unfortunates. The honor men were of course delighted with the results of the trip. And right well they might be. The course was unquestioned one of the most exacting that can be found in the south of the country, and the quality of roads duly divided between dirt and macadam, each of different, and divided good roads, with steep and tree curves that demand of and not only the most control of the car, but also that of the driver's nerve and quick head. The skill I mean of.

The going to Dublin was not hard. Beyond that it must be confessed it was just the reverse. It was the water between the going was poor indeed and strange when a control the name of the meeting station all the bad points of the road fell were forgotten in the feeling of good fellowship that suddenly prevailed, changing to the grouse.

The run brought forth many interesting points. It showed the advantage of this kind and that other one, and from such hardened vet ans as W. F. Wright of the Alco it brought out the strong endorsement that it was the fairest test handled and most everybody run of the kind that it had ever been our pleasure to experience. One thing which impressed the veteran of such runs as this was the seeming absence of every hurry in the control to live up to the rules in spirit and letter.

There was no little bickering over this, that or the other as all points, but every one seemed a desire to carry out the conditions. Consequently the work of the committee was simplified immensely and things ran as smooth as a six-day clock.

There was no mixing up or undue excitement at the controls. Too men seemed to know what was expected from them and acted accordingly, so much so that hardened Glidden tour veterans expressed their pleasure and appreciation of the work of the committee. But that is another matter.

Brilliant Performances.

There were several brilliant performances noted during the day none the least of which was the work done by Arthur A. Knights in his Oldsmobile runabout, who within less than twenty four hours covered the course in safety, making a grand total of 420 miles without once adjusting his engine. True it is that he broke a front spring just outside of Keene on the return, but that was not touched and he came home in good style. His first trip was started about 2 o'clock the previous evening when he and Brother Harry started out and had the downfall. They he was on hand at the start and if ever a man earned a certificate of ability he was that man. He led the runabout class all day and finished with a clean score.

The six-cooled cars again showed their ability as engines of powerful endurance and great cooling ability. The two Knox cars finished with a clean score and that driven by W. E. Wright did in all respects like the 216 miles and was never once stopped from early morning until late at night, when Mr. Wright pulled into Springfield and was again a happy man. The Knox, driven by Frank Wing, vied with the Knox in its performance, the two repeating their great success of the Glidden of a year ago.

Ramblers' Clean Scores.

V. A. Charles had the distinction of seeing both his Ramblers come through with a clean score, thereby celebrating his entry on his first year as manager of the local branch. These cars performed admirably throughout and their credit and honor was by no means dimmed through the work of yesterday. The Corbin runabout likewise had a perfect score, its running mate in the touring car class being penalized for a slight adjustment. The Columbia, driven by Harry Walcrer, came through with a clean score, being the first to arrive in Boston, leaving the Concord control in seventh position.

The Berliet and the Stoddard-Dayton were always up front and in them Mr. Whitney has two clean score cars, each of recognized ability, and of power and can do of good ring a good account of themselves, the four-cylinder Cadillac was more fortunate than its little sister, finishing her slung in grand style, while the Great, driven by Louis Great, was likewise among the good performers.

Craig-Toledo a Good One.

The Craig-Toledo runabout, which made its debut as a contestant in events in this section, showed itself to be a car of sterling quality, possessed of speed and capable of rendering a good account of itself. The Studebaker was another car which showed well and proved in this long distance run. The Winton, which has of late refrained from participating in events of a long or short distance order, was among the contestants in the run, and the car of last showed itself today to be as any car in the race and that Winton has by no means lost its mechanical ability which has done so much toward advancing the car and help try to its present high position in the markets of the world. The Lozier was another one of the cars there with the goods, and though the run was never once in the rush, but always well up with the bunch taking and giving the dust with remarkable regularity.

And to sing about dust brings to mind the fact that the dust between Keene and Dublin had not part of the day a tendency to press. The residents along the route took the precautions to close their windows and doors during the passage of the automobile. At Dublin and Keene but a few pounds but it is willing to return to the run who will endure poverty to be will give the real estate he gathered on the trip to the first needy person applying for the same.

Blinding Dust.

The dust raised along the entire route was something alarming to say the least. At times it was fairly blinding, and car after cars slowed down in its speed, in order to prevent a possible accident. There was not a single accident to an individual, every man seeming to drive with great care. In passing through towns there was no tendency to speed, but rather a desire to observe in every particular the legal requirements. This was necessary in order to prevent disqualification, as the committee had so laid out its schedule of time between controls that a car could travel with comfort and within legal requirements and yet be in the running for the premier honors.

Two cars that were not in the run, itself, but which performed yeoman service in the cause were the American Berliet and the White, used as official cars. The former was driven by F. C. Whitcomb of Park Square station, and it left us in control after the last car had been checked out, taking with it the checker for that station and arriving at the Quincy house in time to witness the checking out of the cars. It did its work admirably, arriving at times from four to seven passengers, and never once boulked, going through the gruelling with a clean score. The White, contributed by S. Hathaway, Hartford, did good work, taking out the checkers in the early morning, and bringing them home in the afternoon.

The cars I listed about 8 o'clock last evening, but the committee did not get back over the report of the observers in the city of that famous car.

ELEANOR BEATS OUT MARBLEHEAD FLEET

The most interesting race came in Class Q, in which were the Little Rhody, Eleanor, Essex, Sally IX., Dorothy Q. and Orestes.

The Essex got the best of the start, with the Eleanor close on to her heels, the others at inward end of the. The Eleanor stood over toward Car Island, while the others stood to the westward. The Eleanor was first at the windward mark about three minutes ahead of the Essex and the Little Rhody about a minute astern of Essex, the rest in the rear.

The Eleanor was first to finish, being but a few seconds ahead of the Essex and Dorothy Q. with Sally IX. for astern.

In the first rating class the Maria I. went out; in the second rating class Sally IX. won, and in the sonder class the Hayseed III. was chased.

WINTON CO. DEFIES "23."

The Winton Company isn't afraid of "Skidoo." In selecting space for the Fall show in New York, Vice-President Henderson of the Winton Company ignored superstition and chose space 23, so that Winton cars will again be exhibited directly opposite the main entrance of Madison Square Garden.

WILL SAIL TUESDAY IN SEARCH FOR POLE

Capt. Comer of East Haddam to Command Fiala Expedition to the Far North.

Middletown Conn., July 6.—Captain George Comer of East Haddam, an old whaling master, who has been selected to command the Fiala expedition in searching for the North pole, will sail from New London harbor next Tuesday in the A. T. Gifford, a fifty-eight-ton vessel, which was built in Gloucester, Mass., about twenty years ago, and has since been sold from that port on many whaling voyages.

The Gifford will shape its course toward Cape Fullerton, Hudson Bay, and will then sail northward establishing bases of supplies for the main Fiala expedition, which will follow later. The crew consists of three mates, six seamen, a cook and steward. It is expected to find additional help among the Esquimaux, among whom Captain Comer has made many friends on previous voyages.

Captain Comer commanded the ill-fated Era, a New Bedford vessel which was wrecked off the Newfoundland coast last year. He is confident the expedition will reach the pole as he expects to steer his vessel in one of the northward drifts which he thinks will lead directly to it.

FREE OUTINGS FOR THE POOR OF REVERE

Louis P. Bopp Plans Weekly Ocean Sail—First Will Be Given Next Tuesday.

A whole day's outing down Boston harbor is to be given free to the poor and needy women and children of Revere next Tuesday. Every woman or child who evidently could not afford such a trip is to have the chance to spend a cool day on the water and see the sights of the harbor, through the generosity of Louis P. Bopp, the proprietor of several amusement enterprises at Revere Beach.

For this purpose Mr. Bopp has chartered the steamer Philadelphia for the whole of Tuesday. The boat will leave Central wharf promptly at ten o'clock Tuesday morning and spend the entire day down the harbor. If it should rain the trip will be held on the next pleasant day following.

The number who can participate in Mr. Bopp's generosity is not limited and any woman or child in Revere who couldn't afford the trip and badly can go. A dollar lunch will be served.

Mr. Bopp plans to hold several similar trips during the season of hot weather. Unless Tuesday's trip proves a failure a second one will be run the following week. If the trip is a success others will probably be held weekly for the rest of the summer.

Tickets for the trip can be secured from Mr. Bopp at his office in Revere or at the office of J. B. Hasek, overseer of the poor, in the Revere Town Hall.

SLAYER REPRIEVED ON VERGE OF DEATH

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, July 6.—With the priest at his side hearing what was to have been his last confession, with the warden testing the current in the death chamber and with but twelve hours between him and the electric chair, John Bell to-day got a month's reprieve. Even the trousers that the convicted murderer of Dr Charles Wilmot Townsend was to wear to his execution had been slit up the leg so that the electrode might press against his bare leg.

At once Judge Clarke, in the Supreme Court at Brooklyn, granted the respite to hear argument for a new trial, and Bell's lawyer, rushing to the 'phone, called Warden Johnson at Sing Sing frantically to tell him the news. It is said Bell fainted in his cell when told that his execution had been postponed.

Since Bell was convicted of shooting Dr. Townsend, his counsel, Frank J. Milligan, has been working desperately for a new trial. He had little time, for the sentence read that Bell should be electrocuted during the week beginning July 7. Friday night Warden Johnson wired that Bell would be placed in the chair five minutes before midnight on Saturday.

BRAVES DANGER IN SEA TRAGEDY

BAKER PALMER

DAVID B. STUDLEY

SAVES SICK WIFE AS VESSEL SINKS

FIGHTS FLAMES AND SEA

Having passed safely through the triple dangers of fire, fire and water after an all-night drift of nine miles in an open boat from death, Mrs. David B. Studley, wife of the captain of the three-masted schooner Maud Sherwood, told the story yesterday of the sailing down and sinking of the Sherwood, and the brave work of her husband and his men in getting her safe and dry aboard the five-master Baker Palmer, that had sent the Sherwood to the bottom off Race Point the day night.

Although all but one member of the schooner's crew were below decks at the time of the collision, all were saved. The schooner sank four minutes after it had been struck.

"I had been ill for several days," explained Mrs. Studley to a Boston Sunday American reporter, "and had not left my berth. My husband and fourteen year old son, Lee, had retired. It was about 2:30 when I was awakened from my berth by a shock that sent everything in the room flying, and knocked from the table a lighted lamp that set fire to the flooring.

In another minute my husband and son, that he had a hard fight for life and that my teeth hard and said nothing. When we time a rush of water poured down from the deck. My husband picked me up in his arms and carried me upon deck.

"I almost fainted with pain but knew that he had a hard fight for life and my teeth hard and said nothing. When we reached the deck I was level with the sea. The Palmer was just backing away.

Hoisted to Safety by Rope.

"My husband, Mate West and two Cape Verde sailors, Brito and Gomez, carried me to the chains and tied a rope around me. Then one end of the rope was thrown to the Palmer and I was hauled on board.

I thought I would die as the rope cut through my scanty clothing and into my skin.

My son Lee, followed me by the same route and was hauled on board just as the Sherwood went down.

The collision occurred during clear weather and Captain Studley says that while it was the fault of the Palmer, although Captain Samuel, of the latter vessel, claims that the smaller vessel disregarded the signals.

The Sherwood was laden with coal from Newport News to Pejepscot and the Palmer was bound for Baltimore, light.

The Sherwood's crew were brought to Boston yesterday morning and Mrs. Studley was taken to the home of her sister, Mrs. Mary E. Rice, No. 217 Quincy street, Dorchester.

Can't Trousers Into Sea.

Young Lee Studley, in spite of his narrow escape from death, could not help feeling very angry at West, the mate—a one-armed veteran of the sea—because of an act of the latter that caused the boy much embarrassment. Lee had grabbed up a pair of trousers when he ran to the deck and when he was told to follow his mother over the bow of the Sherwood he handed the trousers to West.

Without the pants Ahoming West, and dropped them into the sea.

Then Lee had to make the best of a pair of trousers many sizes too large when he reached the Palmer and refused to speak to the mate all the way to Boston.

PLAN FOR INTERNATIONAL EMIGRATION CONFERENCE

American Commissioner Makes Suggestion to Settle Europe's Surplus Population Problem.

Vienna, July 6.—An international conference to discuss the regulation of emigration to the United States will probably be the outcome of the visit of the immigration commission sent to Europe by the United States government to arrange for better supervision of the forwarding of Europe's surplus population to America. The establishment of permanent American agents in Europe to examine prospective emigrants is a proposition that may follow.

These plans were discussed to-day by Senator Dillingham, one of the American commissioners, with the president of the Austrian coastal association. The proposal to have the whole emigration problem discussed at an international conference was then made.

If American agents are sent to Europe, in addition to the examination of emigrants, they will report to the public parties reports as to the condition of the American market, with other facts of value to persons contemplating seeking homes in the new world.

The Austrian Coastal Association has agreed to draw up a scheme for the proposed conference.

WILD WEST HOLDUP STARTLES NEWPORT

Newport, R. I., July 6.—A real Wild West hold-up on crowded Thames street this afternoon caused a sensation among the good people of Newport.

A mild-mannered young man who registered last night at the Perry House as Henry F. Miller, Brooklyn, N. Y., entered the Old City Hall Novelty Shop, when it was deserted except for one clerk, and asked to be shown some watering pots. The watering pots, as the young man probably knew in advance, were in a far corner of the store. While the clerk was getting some for the customer the latter was filling his pockets with articles. The clerk ordered the man to put the stuff back, but the latter drew a revolver and ordered him to keep quiet on pain of death.

The clerk shouted and a policeman ran in from Cie street and disarmed the stranger after a struggle. At the station house the prisoner said he lived at No. 340 Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn, but refused to tell anything more about himself.

HOLDS BOY FROM DEATH BEFORE CAR

When Harold Lawson, nine years old was struck by an inward-bound electric car at Mt. Auburn and Salem streets, Malden, last night, his life was saved by Policeman Jeremiah McDonald, who was standing on the running board of the car.

As the boy was thrown to the street the policeman reached out over the fender and caught him by the arm, holding him out of danger till the car was stopped.

Aside from some bruises the boy was not hurt. Had Policeman McDonald not acted, the boy would have been killed.

Lawson lives at No. 26 Baldwin street, Malden, and was trying to cross the track in front of the car when he was struck.

FALLS DOWN STAIRS.

John O'Brien, 20, of No. 685 East Second street, South Boston, is at the City Hospital in a critical condition as a result of a fractured skull, received by falling down a flight of stairs at No. 589 East Second street.

BURGLAR SHOOTS TO ESCAPE CAPTURE

Lynn, June 6 In a struggle with a burglar he caught stealing skins from his morocco factory early to-day, Franklin Haddock, one of Lynn's wealthiest leather men, narrowly escaped death. The burglar fired two shots at him, one of which struck him on the head and inflicted a scalp wound half an inch deep and three inches long.

Mr. Haddock was in his factory office when he heard someone prowling about the premises. On a stairway near the basement he encountered the burglar, grappled with him and threw him to the floor. As Mr. Haddock tried to get a grip on the burglar's throat the two shots were fired, and he fell stunned to the floor.

Mr. Haddock has been unable to give the Lynn police a description of the burglar, and it is feared that he will never be captured.

STRIKE THREATENS ON BOSTON LINE

Dispatches from Portland say that the first and second officers of the Merchants & Miners Transportation Boston line steamer to go on strike did not get unless their request for an advance in all three grades is granted at once.

Upon the assurance that their demands would be considered, the officers refrained from carrying out their threat. Six months ago a general strike was threatened, in which the Boston, Savannah and Fall River and Iron steamers, but the officers of the company at that time said that an agreement was reached whereby the threatened strike was called off.

At the office of the company at Constitution Wharf the managing officers professed to know nothing about the Philadelphia trouble, claiming that it was the first knowledge that any strike was brewing.

In the above photo-diagram are shown the most important places in the investigation of the death mystery of Mrs. Annie H. Studley at Canobie Lake, Salem, N. H. Her body was found in the water at the foot of the rock on which two men are standing in the centre of the picture. The bend in the road marked with a cross is near the point where George W. Taylor was on Monday night when he says he heard three screams. At the extreme left are the woods where Taylor says disappeared the man who came running along the road after the screams were heard. Rock marked with a cross shows where C. T. Merrill and others saw Mrs. Studley's hat. Taylor, the colored man, who figures so prominently in the case and who was questioned by the police at Lawrence last night is shown at the extreme right. BOSTON ALIENIST TO BEGIN INQUIRY INTO SANITY OF MRS. EDDY

STREETER SEES VICTORY

DR. GEORGE F. JELLY of Boston, chairman of the State Board of Insanity and one of the leading alienists in the United States, who has just been appointed as one of the experts to inquire into the mental competency of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, left for Concord, N. H., yesterday afternoon to confer with Judge Chamberlain of the Superior Court there. He will later meet Judge Aldrich, the recently appointed master in the Eddy case.

Dr. G. A. Bloomer, of Providence, who has been appointed co-master with Dr. Jelly and Judge Aldrich, will join them there as soon as he receives permission to do so from the trustees of the Butler Hospital.

May Seek Injunction.

It was generally declared at Concord, N. H., last night that General Frank S. Streeter, personal counsel for Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, will ask Judge Robert N. Chamberlain of the Superior Court for Merrimack County, for an injunction enjoining the plaintiffs from taking depositions in the case until the question of Mrs. Eddy's competency is decided.

By agreement of counsel, to-day, these depositions were again postponed until July 17. This is the second postponement that has been made since the first date, July 1. This agreement is said to have been asked for by General Streeter and the change of date was made by consent of former Senator William E. Chandler and his associates. If so however, the matter is pressed on the 17th the injunction may be asked for at that time.

With to Postpone Depositions.

It is known that for a number of reasons General Streeter does not wish to have the depositions go on at this time. It is in the midst of the vacation season in the courts yet he is busily engaged in hearings in the Wallace case, involving the millions of Ebenezer Wallace, late of Rochester and is attending to a number of other important matters. The hearings and other matters attending the investigations of Judge Pingree are in part this week, George W. Jelly and H. Wade Hooper into the estate of Mrs. Eddy, will, in the nature of the case, not come on in the very near future.

This question of expediency, however, is not the primary one in forming the desires of the defendants. The reasons they are they that the competency of Mrs. Eddy will be established by the masters appointed to decide upon it and the case in the courts may be dismissed so that the Long Career can go on undisturbed.

MAYOR LEADS MEN IN EVICTING TENANT

Taunton, July 6.—The spectacle of Mayor Tracy directing a small army of men in removing furniture from the house No. 61 Broadway and piling it on the walk attracted a crowd today.

The Mayor recently bought the property for a homestead and ordered the tenants out by July 1, but George Carpenter failed to leave. With the abatement writ the Mayor summoned a constable, who rounded up an army of men from the common.

Mayor Tracy, accompanied by his wife, then went to the house, forced the door and ejected the furniture. A thousand people witnessed the eviction.

One Dead, 3 Overcome by Heat; Cool Today With Rain Promised

Erratic Mercury Causes Big Exodus to the Beaches, Country Places and Mountain Resorts.

The heat, which resulted in one death and three prostrations in Boston yesterday, may be relieved to-day by showers and cooler atmosphere. The local forecast is:

"Sunday, partly cloudy to cloudy; probable showers. Light south to southwesterly winds."

While waiting for a train at the South Station at 7 o'clock last evening, Alexander Buchanan, aged thirty-five, of Needham, was overcome by the heat. He was removed to the Relief Station. His condition was not considered serious.

Lawrence A. Aspinwall of No. 78 Dustin street, Brighton, at 8 o'clock yesterday afternoon was found unconscious in a field at the corner of Cambridge and Dustin streets, Brighton. He was taken home in a police ambulance.

Mrs. Ada A. Weatherall, seventy years old, of Union Park street, was overcome near her home while returning from a shopping trip. She was taken to the City Hospital.

Yesterday morning Frederick Smith, fifty years old, a janitor, was found dead from heat prostration in his room at No. 604 Tremont street, South End.

The mercury was rather erratic yesterday. It recorded 71 degrees at 9 a. m. By noon it was up to 82. By 1 o'clock it had fallen to 71. Then it climbed to 79 again in the next three hours.

The first Saturday brought the usual hot-weather exodus to the beach, country and mountains. The railroad men at the two big terminal stations hustled large quantities of baggage on the through trains. The locals to suburban resorts were crowded after the noon hour.

Portions of New Hampshire were swept by rain-storms last night, and rain, accompanied by electrical display, was reported from the New London district in Connecticut.

Sea So Solid With Mackerel Fishermen Could Walk on Them

Constellation's Crew Hauled 16,000 on Board and Quickly Sold Them in Hub Market.

The thirty men of the fishing schooner Constellation were enjoying a belated Fourth of July celebration yesterday afternoon. The real Fourth they spent at sea and it was a quiet sort of a day for them.

On Friday while off Nantucket the Constellation ran into a school of mackerel "so thick you could walk ashore on them" as one of the men explained and in reality about nine o'clock that morning 16,000 of the fish had been hauled aboard.

Then came a race for the Boston market which was reached in time to-day to dispose of the whole cargo at twelve cents each, which netted $75 apiece to the members of the crew as their share. When the men were paid off the real celebration of the Fourth began.

Thief Tries to Get The False Teeth of George Washington

Priceless Curio in Baltimore Museum Carved from Solid Block of Ivory.

Baltimore, July 6.—What is believed to have been an attempt to steal the false teeth of George Washington, a priceless curio, was made when a thief tried to enter the museum of Baltimore College of Dental Surgery.

The teeth, which are crude and complicated, were carved and ground from a solid block of ivory. They were made by Ivy, John Greenwood of New York, who enjoyed the honor of having supplied the father of his country with the means of grinding his food when nature failed him.

BOSTON WOMAN HURLED IN LAKE FROM BOAT BY MANIAC SLAYER?

Eel Grass in Mrs. Studley's Hair Shows She Was Not Killed Where Body Lay.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 6.—Following the statements made by George W. Taylor, the hostler, in connection with the death mystery of Mrs. Annie H. Studley, whose body was found in Canobie lake, he was taken to the Lawrence police station to-night, subjected to a rigid examination and later brought to Portsmouth.

Until early this morning Taylor was examined by County Attorney Batchelder at his home in Portsmouth. Taylor agreed to accompany Sheriff Collis from Lawrence and protested that he had told the truth. It is announced that Taylor is to be held as a witness.

His examination was finished shortly after 2 A. M. He spent the rest of the night in the house of the sheriff, which adjoins the jail.

Taylor is the negro who told Sheriff Collis and his men that last Monday night while walking along Policy road, near the lake, he heard three screams by a woman. Then he saw a man, whom he recognized as a demented person who had been at Salem, runnin toward him along the road. The negro tried to sneak to him, when the stranger turned and dashed into the woods.

Efforts are being made to corroborate Taylor's story. At the hour he named other people were never the place where the body was found then he. They heard nothing and saw no one running.

Taylor went to Lawrence, where he lives at No. 10 Bedford street. He was not there when Sheriff Collis called yesterday. The Lawrence police located him in Andover. He did not resist being taken to the station.

WOMAN'S BODY THROWN INTO LAKE FROM BOAT, THE LATEST THEORY

Salem, N. H., July 6.—Spurred on by the instructions of Attorney-General Eastman and the reported presence of three detectives, who are said to have been engaged to work on the case, the county authorities [illegible] down one after clue in the story surrounding the death of Mrs. Annie H. Studley, the Boston woman whose body was found in Canobie Lake on Tuesday.

Exhaustive search has been made all along the lake in the theory that the body of Mrs. Studley might have been buried from a boat by the slayer unobserved from other craft.

Eel Grass in Hair.

If Mrs Studley were murdered, the crime was possibly not committed on the side of the lake where the body was found. That fact was brought out to-day when it became known for the first time that, when the body was pulled ashore by the Rev. Henry Candler and those who came to his assistance, many strands of eel grass clung to the hair.

Mr. Candler noted the eel grass. So did Miss Annie Alexander who lives on the Kendrick place, a short distance away. Before them in authority arrived the eel grass had disappeared.

There is no eel grass anywhere near the spot where Mr. Candler saw the body of Mrs Studley floating in the waters of Canobie and pulled it ashore. All along that side of the lake the shore is either rocky or sandy. Even out in the middle of the body of water the grass is to be found.

In fact, there are only two places where eel grass is known to be in any abundance about Canobie lake. One is a short distance from the Canobie Lake Park, and the other is across the pond on the shore just above Dover picnic grove.

Hands Drawn Back.

Another peculiar fact which Mr. Candler brought out in a talk with a Boston Sunday American was the position of the arms. "I noticed them particularly," said Mr. Candler. "The hands were drawn back of the hips, and the shoulders seemed to be local forward."

Search is to be made either to-morrow or Monday at the two points named, the shore where colarats is to be found. While the officials hope to find the spot where Mrs. Studley was slain, where the blows were dealt that ended her life, they are not sure of success.

The evidence seems to prove to some of the investigators that Mrs. Studley was killed at some other point than where the body was found and that near where her hat was discovered on the rock; but there is still another explanation for it.

Dropped in Lake From Boat?

If the murderer had a boat, it is more than possible that in order to conceal the body where it would not be immediately located he placed it quickly in the craft, pinned if she did commit suicide."

Taylor, Who Saw Demented Man, Held as Witness After Third Degree Ordeal.

rowed across the lake, tied the only heavy article which he had with him, the woman's handbag, which contained nothing of value after what bills were in the purse had been removed, about her waist, and dropped the body overboard.

From that point it would have floated gradually across the lake enough under the surface so as not to be quickly noticed to the place where it was seen by Rev. Mr. Candler and his two little daughters, Bessie and Emily.

It is a significant fact that none of the county officers on the scene, baffling as the case has been to them, is ready to accept the theory of suicide.

"Policy clues is about all we can do," Sheriff Collis said to a Boston Sunday American reporter. "Everyone that has come to me has been [illegible] Three is absence of motive to prove it a case of murder, and there are certain acts of the woman that would make it seem a suicide, but I have not been able to see how she could have sustained those wounds by any jump from any point on the lake

Every Hairpin Missing.

"Then, there is the position of the body," continued the Sheriff. "The hair was undone; every hairpin had disappeared. The rest of the clothing was not disarranged. Either she very carefully removed hairpins and combs before jumping into the water, or they were loosened in a struggle. I don't believe there was enough motion of the body in the water to dislodge all of them.

"Now, if she removed them before jumping into the water, why were they not found with the body? We haven't found one of them.

"If she jumped into the water at that point, why would she seek by some of her boots that were on the lake? She arrived at the lake between 10 o'clock and 10:30. She had breakfasted at the hotel probably about 8 o'clock, certainly not later than 9 o'clock. Let the autopsy surgeons say how long it was before death. She must have died sometime before noon, on Monday or not much later.

"Along that road and in that immediate vicinity at that time were many people. Yet no one of them saw the woman. They did see her hat and one saw both hat and parasol. The parasol disappeared before the body was found.

"There you have it. Some things point to suicide, many things would be expected of murder."

HAMMERSTEIN GETS FIVE GREAT TENORS

Back From Abroad Impresario Says He Covered Europe in Search for Singers.

New York, July 6.—Oscar Hammerstein was among the passengers who arrived on the Amerika from Cherbourg today. The owner of the Manhattan Opera House was in fine form, refusing to consider life on the hot weather seriously.

"Certainly I am glad to get home," said he. "I've been in Madrid, Berlin, Paris, London, Jerusalem and Algiers. No, I wasn't looking for singers in Jerusalem. I was searching for the graves of my ancestors, but was unsuccessful.

"I am not going to talk singers until tomorrow, and then I will talk about but five tenors. I got the five greatest in Europe last week. No, I guess I will get a very well without Bonci.

"The general impression on the other side is that Caruso will not be permitted to land in this country. Anyway, there should be a law against bad singers coming to America.

Four of the tenors under contract with Mr. Hammerstein are Rasel, Xanatello, Dalmores and Cagonia. The fifth the impresario has up his sleeve and will not tell about until to-day.

Zenatello, Mr. Hammerstein said, would sing in London after he had appeared here. Calvo and Melba will be over early.

ATTENTION, LANDLORDS!

Chilltoths, O., July 6.—John F. Bryan, a real estate dealer, in a fit of anger kicked in the door of a tenant and died of heart paralysis two hours afterward.

J. W. CUMMINGS NOT A CANDIDATE

Former Fall River Mayor Declares He's Out of Field for Nomination.

John P. Feeney, chairman of the Democratic State Committee, has come out for General Charles W. Bartlett as candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor.

This announcement was made last evening after a conference in Fall River with Honorable John W. Cummings, former Mayor of that city, which conference was also attended by General Bartlett.

The conference lasted for over an hour, during which time the whole situation was discussed. At its close, Mr. Cummings stated that he was not a candidate for the nomination, would not make a contest for it, and released his friends from such consideration.

This positive declaration left Mr. Feeney free to cast in his lot with General Bartlett, the candidate of the rest of the ticket, and he announced the name of Mayor Cummings and held to that supposition until Mr. Cummings would declare himself.

Last evening, Chairman Feeney gave out the following statement:

"At a conference held in Fall River today, at which General Charles W. Bartlett, Ex-Mayor John W. Cummings and myself were present, Mr. Cummings announced that he would not enter into a contest for the Democratic nomination for Governor, and is not a candidate. In view of Mr. Cummings's positive declaration I have decided to support General Bartlett."

BIG POLICEMAN IN FIGHT CAPTURES 2

After a hard struggle in the presence of a crowd of men, Policeman Philip Brown, the biggest man on the Allston force, succeeded last night in subduing and arresting two young men whom he charged with stealing a watch from August Sagastou, of Everett. The prisoners said they were J. F. Burns, aged eighteen, of No. 11 Corning street, and Fred Morris, aged nineteen, of No. 15 Eaton street.

Brown saw the men approach Sagastou on a road that leads to a railway at No. 1009 Washington street. One of the men put his hand in Sagastou's vest pocket and drew out a watch. Then Brown descended upon them. The men put up a desperate fight and they and the policeman rolled over and over on the pavement so rapidly that the excited crowd of onlookers could not go to the officer's help.

At last Brown got his men subdued and took them to the Lafrance street station, where the watch was found in the possession of one of them. Then the prisoners were taken to the City Prison.

BOY'S TERRIBLE FLIGHT.

Millersburg, O., July 6.—Frank Stevens, aged ten, fell down a manhole a distance of ten feet, and slightly astride the sharp edge of an empty sugar barrel, which nearly split him in two.

Ask Roosevelt to Free Girl Who Stole Missionary Funds

Pardon Requested for Church Worker Who Passed Counterfeit Bill on Minister.

Washington, July 6.—President Roosevelt will soon be called upon to pass upon an application for pardon that involves a young woman of former high standing in Baltimore society. The case is one of the most curious ever brought to the attention of the Department of Justice, and when it has received the attention of Attorney-General Bonaparte it will then be passed up to the President.

Miss Bond was a clerk to a Methodist missionary body in Baltimore. A number of her male relatives are ministers and her family is of the best. She was a devoted member and took part in missionary and other work. She was treasurer of a fund for missions. In that position she had raised probably $100 when the temptation to spend some of it came to her better judgment. Toward the end of the Methodist conference to meet the needs of the charge of the work called on Miss Bond for the money. She was in despair and made the matter worse by taking a $10 note of the United States Government and raising it by means of a pen to $100. She handed the minister the counterfeit note and he found he was [illegible] when he got to the conference.

Secret service men arrested Miss Bond and she was sentenced to spend five years in the city jail at Baltimore.

Strong petitions for her pardon have been received at the Department of Justice. The case will be referred to United States Judge Morris and District Attorney Rose at Baltimore. They are both said to favor commutation of sentence for the young woman.

Alfred Vanderbilt Laughs at Stories of Division of Millions

Sailing for Home, He Tells English People Story is News to Him.

London, July 6.—Alfred Vanderbilt, who is sailing on Thursday, was asked to-day if he was hurrying home to participate in the partition of the Vanderbilt estate, golden details of which have filled the London papers of the week. Mr. Vanderbilt laughed and said:

"I have seen some stories interested re They have given me lots of information about my family and its wealth I did not know before. Now always when I want to know what's going on in my family I read the newspapers.

"I did not know there was going to be a division of the Vanderbilt millions. Anyway I am glad to learn there is going to be one. I like the way the newspapers have arranged to have the trustees hand me several millions some months before I am entitled to them. The thought that I will get those unexpected millions next month adds very much to my return home.

"Just say I appreciate the newspapers' generosity."

Oyster Bay, N. Y., July 6.—President Roosevelt and the members of his family spent picnicking to-day on the shore of Lloyd's Neck.

They packed their lunch baskets and started on their picnic grounds early today from the J. West Roosevelt pier, Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Ethel and several of their friends made the journey around the shore of the sound on board the Sylph.

The President, Theodore, Jr., Archie and Quentin went by rowboat, in addition to the generous supply of good things to eat, the Roosevelt boys took their rifles to the picnic grounds to do some target shooting during the day.

As the President did not return home until evening, Secretary Loeb did not make his usual trip to Sagamore Hill with the daily grist of official papers.

PIDGIN OUSTS MAN HE SAYS PLOTTED HIS DOWNFALL.

Dismisses Sears, Superintendent of Employment Bureau, and Appoints Successor.

SENDS LETTER TO GUILD

Deposed Public Servant Declares Manufacturers' Association Demanded His Head.

DECLARING that he had been ousted from his position as chief of the State Bureau of the Statistics of Labor at the behest of the Manufacturers' Association of America, the enmity of which he had incurred through his efforts to better the condition of the workingman, Charles F. Pidgin yesterday took advantage of his last day in office to discharge one of the men he held responsible for his downfall.

In the last document he signed in his official capacity he dismissed Walter L. Sears, superintendent of the State Free Employment Office in his place he appointed G. Harry Dunderdale, the present chief clerk. To replace Dunderdale Mr. Pidgin appointed Chester W. Allen.

Lays Blame On Sears.

Mr. Pidgin said last night that he blamed Sears for having supplied Lieutenant-Governor Draper with material out of which the Lieutenant-Governor and others opposed to the Pidgin administration constructed some of their attacks.

Yesterday Mr. Pidgin received legal advice to the effect that the civil service commission may take up his case and defend him against the action of the Governor's Council in refusing to reappoint him.

Was Summarily Discharged.

"I have to thank you for your letter published in the newspapers on July 4. Your signed copy of it has not yet reached me. I consider that it overrules me fully from the manifestly prejudiced charges made against me by the committee of the executive council, and which I successfully refuted in presence of the council, for you say that no hint of dishonesty nor dishonor has been alleged even by those who have served the committee of your in motive.

"Since I [illegible] at sixty three years of age, with a whitened hair, and after thirty four years spent in the service of the Commonwealth, I am given no notice, but am summarily dismissed from my position, although Mr. Gaffney told me over the telephone late Tuesday afternoon 'to keep quiet, and it would be settled in the family.'

"My Creation and Pride."

"Personally I will not complain. I can make a living. But there is another side to the question. Any business house would give an old servant time in which to transfer his duties to inexperienced hands. My department is a large one, with eleven divisions and eighty-

MAD DOG'S VICTIMS' CONDITION CRITICAL

Two of Eight Persons Bitten Will Have to Be Sent to Pasteur Institute.

WAS SHOT BY POLICEMAN

Boston Terrier Was Crazed by Fire Crackers Boys Set Off In Fourth Celebration.

Some d[illegible] victims are in a critical condition and are suffering intense wounds inflicted by the sharp teeth of the mad terrier, which escaped from the house at No. 1 Dorrance street, Roxbury, Wednesday night, and on Friday bit his way from Neponset to South Boston, where he was shot by a policeman.

His mistress, Mrs. Julia Teehan, and his little master, 14-year-old William J. Teehan, are in bed, prayed over Rex a fate and firmly believe that he was crazed by firecrackers and pistol shots before he became ugly.

Here are Rex's victims:

Michael Dwan, twenty-seven years, of No. 868 Dorchester avenue, Dorchester, bitten eight times at corner of B and Fourth streets, South Boston, at 11:30 p. m. Wounds cauterized by Dr. Sheridan of Station 6. Now in City Hospital in critical condition.

Pasteur Patient.

Carl Johnson, twenty-four years, of No. 168 Walnut street, Neponset. Bitten at the Neponset railroad station on the breast and both arms. Attended by Dr. Little-field. Condition very serious. He will have to be sent to the Pasteur Institute, New York, for the treatment.

Alphonsus Nelson, fourteen years, of No. 46 Savin Hill avenue, Dorchester. Bitten on the arm at the corner of Savin Hill avenue and Dorchester avenue. Attended by Dr. J. H. Sullivan. Condition not serious.

Weep Over Their Loss.

Mrs. Teehan and William wept freely as they talked last night with a reporter for the American reporter of the faithful little animal. Mrs. Teehan said that the dog had disappeared from the home the night before the Fourth and had been out of sight since. Continuing she said:

"Rex was five years old and we have owned him since he was a small puppy. He was the most faithful animal that ever was and we were all very much attached to him. He and Willie were inseparable and he would never allow Willie to be out of his sight for a minute. He always felt that Willie was safe as long as Rex was with him. We do not know that he has saved him from harm many, many times.

Saved from Intruders.

"Once he saved my life. It was about a year ago. I was in the house all alone two colored men entered and I awakened for the first thing I knew were in the room with me. One of them started for me when all of a sudden Rex sprang up and fastened his teeth in his body. He yelled with pain and ran for the door. Rex let go and then sprang for the other man. He did not wait to be bitten, but ran with the other. They never came near the house again.

"After that I always felt safe when I was alone in the house as long as 'Rex' was with me.

"I know that if he had not escaped from the house Wednesday night he would have been gone mad. He was always afraid of firecrackers and the noise of the night before, and I always kept him in the house.

"I intended to Wednesday night, but a crowd of boys called to play so he was given the run of the yard. Before I knew it he had gone. I was much grieved when I found that he had been shot."

MUNICIPAL LEAGUE SCORES VICTORY

The city of Cambridge has passed an order appropriating $30,000 for an incinerator plant. The Municipal Ownership League took up the fight for this plant about two years ago, and has been actively engaged in interesting the members of the city government in the matter.

The Independence League will include among its local issues the early establishment of this plant.

Augustus Keaser president of the Cambridge Municipal Ownership League, and an active member of the Independence League, said to a reporter of the Boston Sunday American:

MANIPULATORS Laying Bait for Public Keep up BULL Campaign; Sharp Rise Marks Big STOCKS

MARKETS BUOYANT, BUYING IS RAPID

Prices Steadily Soar Toward Figures Reached Before Spring Panic.

Stocks ploughed the speculative sea yesterday not only with greater speed than had been marking their daily course through the week, but with a buoyancy that reached waves of magnification to lift them slightly upward, a point or two nearer the high water mark where they were before the great panic of last March.

Spring pumped them into the slough of a market slump that finally ended in panic and airport in financial circles.

Specifically, an active and broad market both in New York and Boston yesterday ended two weeks of an upward movement which might have been termed hectic. The past week was even more conspicuous for rising markets than was the preceding one. There has been no sign of an actual "boil," as yet, but a general upswing that has carried prices several points above where they were when the almost unprecedently long decline was finally ended two weeks ago.

Bank Statement Surprises.

Yesterday's market was more buoyant and active than the others during the week, which were themselves strong and active. It was only a short session, on a Summer Saturday, and for this reason the strength and activity loomed up all the more conspicuous. There was an unexpected unfavorable bank statement to face, also high call money rates but these played little or no part in checking the advance.

The passing of July 1, when the greatest disbursement of interest and dividend money in financial history was effected, brought no change in the new market movement. Call money rose to 1½ per cent., but had no more effect toward checking activity than did the low rates of a few weeks ago toward stimulating trading.

Surplus Only $865,250.

The liability of the banks was decreased by some $7,300,000, through a decrease of $13,491,000 in deposits, but as the reserve held was lessened by $7,022,800, which was the loss in specie and legal tenders, the decrease in the liability was not sufficient to prevent a loss in the surplus. This last item lost $1,653,062, and although this was not a large amount in itself, it came near wiping out the surplus entirely, following, as did, much larger previous losses. The surplus now stands at only $858,250. In this condition the banks now face a withdrawal of Government deposits which will be made during the coming week, and on which the Union Pacific and Atchison subscriptions, all of which will aggregate about $7,000,000.

The week in Boston brought a return of the activity of two and three months ago, sales amounting to 80,000 to 85,000 shares. The profit taking was responsive at times, causing temporary recessions, but the net result was a gain in the local market was one of advancing prices.

Trinity a Big Feature.

Two stocks, Trinity and Reinstein, were especially prominent throughout the week, the one of the week there was a great rush to buy those two stocks, the belief existing that they really became the market leaders, or indicators of the market. The buying, of course, was purely speculative, as at the time of the first boom it was a "good thing" when it was one.

The net result is that Trinity, after gaining nearly 6 points on one day, receded somewhat, less than that amount, ahead of where it was a week ago, although the activity has been real.

Old Dominion came prominently to public notice with the announcement of an initial dividend on the corrected earnings, after the operating charges had been deducted, and up to now it has come to the front for a good deal more than the usual number of dividends but the novelty soon wore away.

The dividend rate on Edison was increased, and the price showed a response to a substantial advance.

Union Pacific Most Active.

The Boston total sales yesterday amounted to 20,450 shares, or at the rate of nearly 100,000 shares for a full day's session. Aside from Atlantic, the leading features, since these usually quiet stocks were the most active, were Union Pacific, Amalgamated, Arcadian furnished the unusual total of 4,000 shares, on which it gained 2⅝, to 84. Osceola gained 5 points to 153. North Butte 2½ to 1022, Calumet & Hecla, Quincy 3½, to 122½, Tamarack 1¼ to 310, Allouez 1 to 49 and Copper Range 1 to 85.

In New York Amalgamated was the strongest feature, although Union Pacific was also very active. Amalgamated gained 2⅜ points to 92¼, the highest point it has reached in weeks. It was evident that a good deal of the buying was for working this stock up. Union Pacific was freely bought and gained 1½, to 149.

PRICES OF BOSTON COPPERS BOOSTED BY SPECULATION

Though Situation Depends on Metal, Specialists Create Boom Which Big Earnings Failed to Bring.

Manipulation by specialists, coupled with plain buying for an advance by the ordinary run of traders, has accomplished the past week what intrinsic values and record breaking earnings could not do. It has sent the prices of local copper stocks bounding upwards, and the most pessimistic bear now admits that a turn has come in the old Boston "copper" game.

The metal situation, upon which, of course, the fortunes of the copper stocks depend for their last word as to actual existence, seems to have been overlooked in the excitement of climbing aboard the newest speculative band wagon. It is safe to say that the traders themselves have given thought to the prices of the metal for a week. In fact, the most active stock during the week's trading was one which will pay which has never produced a pound of copper. The speculative quality of the trading is thus well illustrated.

The metal market is still in a deadlock. Consumers have not yet surrendered by giving bonding orders, and the producers are waiting until the last moment before making any concessions in price.

It is believed that most producers would willingly shade quotations, but the Metals Selling Company, which handles about one half of all the copper produced in the United States, a combination of action of keeping up the price in accordance with the demand and the Amalgamated Copper company which the Guggenheims have formed in the Ely district has attracted attention to the independent mining companies there, of which the Ely Consolidated and the Giroux are notable ones. The Tri Mutlon has reached a new high price in the past week and it is whispered among the insiders that the Kelly mine has $10,000,000 worth of ore blocked. Henry Timmins bought a down eight car loads of ore from the Larsen mine in the Tonopah district, which, he is ready to say, will be twenty cents per pound, or to twenty-two cents at the lowest.

RECORD GOLD WEEK; OUTPUT IS $537,324

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, July 6.—The production of gold last week was so large that it was thought to be a record output for this Summer, but the past week has improved on it. The week's production was in exact figures at Goldfield alone $537,324 28, or an average value of $37 14

Several big mining flotations are about to be announced. If the stock market holds its present swing the mining market will be booming by next autumn. One company which the Guggenheims have formed in the Ely district has attracted attention to the independent mining companies there, of which the Ely Consolidated and the Giroux are notable ones. The Tri Mutlon has reached a new high price in the past week and it is whispered among the insiders that the Kelly mine has $10,000,000 worth of ore blocked.

Henry Timmins bought a down eight car loads of ore from the Larsen mine in the Tonopah district, which, he is ready to say, will be twenty cents per pound, or to twenty-two cents at the lowest. Nipissing is having a strike.

LAWSON DAY IN WALL STREET.

By Thomas C. Shotwell.

NEW YORK, July 6.—It was Lawson day in Wall street to-day. The Standard Oil system, the Morgan system and the public trailed obediently after the Boston hypnotist. A band statement that would have caused selling on other occasions was ignored. It was a pretty good bank statement at that. The absolute fact of a very good wheat crop was ignored, but then Europe is also facing a short crop and the price for the American crop will more than make up the loss of bushels.

The surprising thing was the confident tone of the market. On the advance no stocks of importance were for sale. The short interest has been pulverized severely. No mercy has been shown in this quarter. The technical position of the market is the weakest for a long time. The money situation is not good. The crop situation is bad, but the market is advancing and promises to advance somewhat further simply because a man has been found with nerve enough to talk in the first person singular.

One feature of the market while . . . is easing is that the Morgan people do not get out and cause fear in the minds of the speculative. If such stocks as Lackawanna, Delaware & Hudson, Jersey Central and Northern Pacific would show some activity it would give the movement more force. Everything supports Amalgamated Copper and St. Paul, and these two stocks have been made the leaders. They may make good properties, but the public cannot be blamed suspecting stocks controlled by the men whom Lawson has denounced as bandits and crooks, to even. Lawson's first work in regard to these stocks may be a strong force for Lawson to overcome. It is refreshing, however, to see sanity returning, even though Lawson be the prophet.

REMARKABLE MIDSUMMER COMBINATION OFFER

Group of High-Grade Securities at a Price That Will Appeal to All Investors

My sixth annual midsummer combination offer of securities, which I herewith make, is not only the most attractive offer of stocks in combination ever made by me, but the most extraordinary investment proposition ever made by an American financial house. In brief, I offer, under certain necessary limitations, a group of stocks finding ready sale at $457 50, for $350.

Since the earliest days of my establishment as a financial agent it has been my annual custom, on or about the middle of July, to recommend to a group of investment securities, of a character such as I could heartily recommend to investors, and offer them for public subscription at a price somewhat less than the price at which the securities could be otherwise purchased.

This procedure has been of advantage to me in this wise: It has added to the volume of business of my office at a time of the year when so many thousands of investors, languid from the summer heat, are postponing their financial operations until the cooler autumn; and even though the margin of profit to me is narrowed willingly in elimination by the price at which I sell the securities, I am the gainer by a continuance of business in its usual volume at a time when most financial houses find themselves practically idle.

It has been of advantage to me in another and a broader way, in that it has given my customers an opportunity to purchase securities at a price which assures them an unusually high dividend return, has increased the value of their investments, and has cemented even more strongly than during the remainder of the year the ties of friendship and mutual interdependence between them and me.

Business dealings between man and man are not—at least never should be—one-sided. It has been a fundamental tenet of my financial gospel—that gospel which I have preached unremittingly and without weariness since the first day I became a financial agent—that not only he who purchases securities should receive a fair compensation for his energy, his work, his skill and his reputation, but that the purchaser—the investor of savings—should receive a fair and adequate share of the money which his investment earns

It is this tenet of my belief, practiced with the same enthusiasm, energy and conviction with which it is preached, that has given me the proud distinction of having a vastly larger percentage of satisfied customers than any other financial house in the world.

I am proud of the reputation that I have made. I am proud, as I look back over the years, of the fact that every promise I have ever made for securities which I have offered for sale has been fulfilled. I am proud that across the entire breadth of this continent are happy, satisfied investors, earning the fair return upon the dollars of their investments because they have trusted me and listened to my carefully considered advice

Nor is this pride unalloyed with a proper humility. I rejoice that through the years I have advised how invariably prospered, in so far as they accepted my advice, but this very feeling of joy over what has been makes me daily more and more humble because I realize that it can be within the province of human power to prevent it, shall any friend or customer of mine find the things which I say to him fail short of the fulfilment of my promises less certain, than in the past.

So, to-day, in offering the investors of America a combination of securities at a price far below the actual present selling prices of the stocks combined, I am but carrying out what has been and will be a distinct policy of my business, in a manner—because of the season's business lethargy—somewhat more profitable to my customers than at ordinary times.

After all thereto and mature consideration I have selected from the securities with whose subscription I am connected the six that I can declare to be the highest grade—the safest, the most promising, the most profitable —the surest to pay the investor in them a fair or high rate of dividend

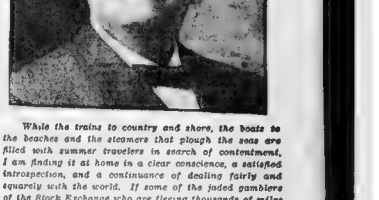
1 share of common stock of the Erie Preserving Company.

This group combines, in a high degree, variety of interest with high dividend-paying qualities. There is a share of stock in the second largest operating oil company in the world. There are five shares of stock of a copper company whose energies have so uncovered the metal that the price of this stock has automatically risen to more than double its par value. There are shares of stock in two strong, prosperous, ably-managed and dividend paying industrial corporations.

With all these securities I am expertly familiar. I am familiar with the inner workings of all the corporations. I myself am the president of two of them and personally responsible to the stockholders for the success of their management. I am personally cognizant of the policy and methods of the others. And with this knowledge I say without hesitation:

THIS GROUP OF SECURITIES, PURCHASED AT THE EXTRAORDINARILY LOW PRICE I HAVE MADE DURING THE DURATION OF THIS MIDSUMMER OFFER, WILL VERY SOON, I BELIEVE, RETURN TO THE INVESTOR DIVIDENDS AGGREGATING HIGHER THAN 10 PER CENT. UPON HIS INVESTMENT.



While the trains to country and shore, the boats to the beaches and the steamers that plough the seas are filled with summer travelers in search of contentment, I am finding it at home in a clear conscience, a satisfied introspection, and a consciousness of dealing squarely with the world. If some of the jaded gamblers of the Stock Exchange who are fleeing thousands of miles in pursuit of happiness, and capturing it not, could exchange places with me for an hour—could hear the words of appreciation and thankfulness that are poured into my ear—could read the grateful letters that daily come to my desk—they would realize that contentment is an inward reward, which they too could achieve if they but directed their energies into higher and nobler channels. In the half dozen years that have come and gone since my first summer as a financial agent the public financial education has advanced almost miraculously. The gospel of a fair and honest return upon money invested, which I then preached in isolation, is now the text of thousands. And tens of thousands of investors, hearkening to me, have shared in the gain that has followed my practice of what I then preached and preach to-day. Why should not contentment rest upon me and my house?—C. F. KING

The Alton Manufacturing Company, with its wonderful "Inverto" lights, on which it controls all the patents, so that serious competition is impossible, with its large factory at Nos. 451 and 453 Greenwich street, New York city, with its great glass works at Sandwich, Mass., is one of the most successful industrial corporations with whose direction I have ever been identified.

The preferred stock of the Alton Manufacturing Company is selling at par, $100. There is being paid upon this stock 8 per cent. annually in dividends, and as the stock is fully participating and the prospects for the great financial success of the company were never brighter, I believe that there will witness a payment of even higher dividends upon it.

The common stock of the Alton Manufacturing Company, the par value of which is also $100, is almost entirely in my hands. I have great confidence in it as a valuable investment, and when I secured control of the corporation, a few months ago, I took fifty per cent. of this stock for my own personal holdings. I have sold but a small quantity of it—and that as a privilege attached to other offers—for there has been a free demand for this security at a price that has risen considerably during the past quarter of a year, until to-day the shares find a ready sale at $75. There is an initial dividend will be paid upon this common stock late this year or early in 1908

I have never offered for subscription a security of which I believed more conservative terms, higher grade and valuable—more "gilt-edged," to use a common phrase —than the 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock of the Erie Preserving Company of Buffalo, New York. This corporation has been in existence 34 years, during which time it has grown from a small company, packing the product of 50 acres of fruits and vegetables, to one of the greatest packing concerns in the world, with five plants in as many different towns, nearly a hundred factory, warehouse and dwelling buildings, 2,500 employes and an annual output of 6,000,000 packages of fruits, vegetables and table delicacies, comprising more than 100 varieties.

For many years the Erie Preserving Company has paid the fixed dividend of 7 per cent. upon its preferred stock, and for the past nine years its net earnings have been sufficient to have paid this dividend three times over. The growth of the business and the large number of orders recently received for the company's product—an amount 50 per cent. in excess of the orders received at the beginning of any previous season—has necessitated expansion, which in turn is responsible for the action of the company's managers in deciding to offer a limited number of shares for public subscription through my office

The par value of both the preferred and common stock of the Erie Preserving Company is $100 per share. Shares of preferred stock are readily selling at par. Shares of common stock are selling at $65. The purchaser is assured of a steady, certain dividend of 7 per cent. upon the preferred stock, while there is every reason to expect a substantial and satisfactory dividend upon the common stock as well

I doubt if there is a reader of these simple statements of fact who is not more or less familiar with the remarkable history of the Douglas Copper Company. This corporation, with a capitalization of $3,000,000, has already blocked out ore at its rich mines in the State of Sonora, Mexico, to the value of $14,000,000, and the 1,000-ton reduction smelter which is now being built at Fundicion, on the new branch of the Southern Pacific railroad, will have its first unit in operation and copper on the market by December 1 of this year.

Competent engineers have estimated that the first year's earnings of the Douglas Copper Company will be not less than 60 per cent. upon the par value of the stock. The par value is $5 per share; the book value, based upon the value of the ore blocked out, is $21 per share. It has been and will be a constant demand for the stock at $10.50 a share, at which price I but recently disposed of an allotment of 20,000 shares.

The par value of the shares which go to make up this group that I am offering for sale in combination is $525.

The actual selling price of the shares, taking the figures at which public sales are being made to-day, is $457.50.

I offer this group of securities in combination for $350.

As this offer is very extraordinary, so it is necessary that it should be strictly limited.

You can readily see from that I am enabled to use but a limited number of shares of the different corporations embraced in the offer for sale at so remarkably low a price. For this reason I make two reservations, as follows.

First—I reserve the right to withdraw this offer at any time, without notice to anyone.

Second—No single person will be allowed to subscribe for more than ten groups of securities at $350 a group. In other words, no one person may place an order for this combination aggregating more than $3,500.

Orders received for these groups will be filled in the exact order in which they are received by mail or wire. The principle of "first come, first served," will be rigidly adhered to. Yet I am unwilling to raise false hopes disappointments, probability—of the allotment coming to an end by reason of the flood of subscriptions in some one mail, in which event, by carefully noting these reservations in advance, I hope to alleviate in so far as possible that feeling of sharp disappointment which will naturally come to the investor unable to share in the advantages of this offer.

For the benefit of those investors who have their funds tied up in securities having a market value but of less attractiveness and earning power than this combination, I make the following offer:

If you desire to exchange stocks and bonds for one or more—not exceeding ten—groups of the stocks herein named, and will bring or send your securities to my office, properly indorsed in blank, with instructions for me to sell them, I will guarantee to secure the highest market price—I am able to do this through the many branch offices and correspondents in all the market centres of the country—and will apply the gross proceeds, without any deduction for brokerage or other commissions, to the purchase of a group or groups of securities as heretofore enumerated in this midsummer combination offer.

IF THE ALTON MANUFACTURING COMPANY SHOULD NEVER PAY A DIVIDEND UPON ITS COMMON STOCK, A HIGHLY IMPROBABLE PROPOSITION —IF THE ERIE PRESERVING COMPANY SHOULD FOREVER HEREAFTER PASS ITS COMMON STOCK DIVIDENDS, A SUGGESTION WHICH IS ALSO IMPROBABLE —IF THE DOUGLAS COPPER COMPANY SHOULD NEVER PAY A DIVIDEND, NOTWITHSTANDING THE $14,000,000 WORTH OF ORE IT HAS ALREADY BLOCKED OUT—IF ALL THESE THINGS SHOULD HAPPEN INVESTORS ACCEPTING THIS MIDSUMMER OFFER OF MINE WOULD STILL RECEIVE FROM THE KING-CROWTHER CORPORATION, THE ALTON MANUFACTURING COMPANY AND THE ERIE PRESERVING COMPANY DIVIDENDS APPROXIMATING 7 PER CENT. ANNUALLY UPON THE AMOUNT INVESTED UNDER THIS OFFER. AND I THINK I AM ESTIMATING THE ACTUAL RETURNS FROM THIS INVESTMENT, AFTER ANOTHER YEAR, WITH RARE CONSERVATISM WHEN I SAY I BELIEVE THE INVESTOR IN THIS GROUP OF SECURITIES WILL RECEIVE DIVIDENDS EXCEEDING 10 PER CENT. UPON HIS INVESTMENT

Let me, in closing this plain, uncolored announcement, again emphasize the limitations I have been obliged to place upon this offer and urge you to lose no time in taking advantage of it.

Address all communications to me personally and make all remittances payable to my order

Old Home Week Beacon Will Shed Its Light for 50 Miles

SHAFT WILL TOWER HIGH ABOVE BOSTON

STRUCTURE WILL BE WORLD FAMOUS

Hub Citizen Offers $20,000 Toward Reproducing Structure in Stone.

The drawings for the proposed Old Home Week Memorial shaft are fast nearing completion and the unique monument to the home love of Bostonians will begin to rise as soon as the necessary amount of money is collected.

Great enthusiasm has been evidenced ever since the original project was first suggested, and it is safe to say that the temporary structure will be the most talked of object in Boston town for many years to come. Lower Washington street is already alive with plans for celebrating the event.

A permit has been issued for a site at the corner of Washington street and Park square, and the work will be rushed to completion, but plans are being brought to bear to have the shaft ready for the opening more in a spirit of the dignity and dignity of the monument.

216 Feet Shaft.

The design prepared by the architectural firm of Hoyle & Schofen provides for one of the most unique structures in the world, one that ideally carries out the idea that prompted its construction. It will be a shaft 216 feet high, with a tower at its summit, surrounding which will be a balcony of staggering height. From this majestic height will spread the powerful rays from numerous searchlights that, it is estimated, will be seen fifty miles away, it became in truth a beacon-burning Bostonian.

There will be six of these powerful searchlights placed inside an immense globe of leaded glass and the whole top will revolve continually so that the shafts will light up land and sea. This glass top will be eight feet in height and six feet in diameter.

The design for the monument will be [illegible] Greek in general idea, [illegible] a proper sense of proportion will be [illegible] four Doric fluted columns at the base.

An Ideal Suggestion.

The lower part of the shaft represents the underlying thought of Old Home Week. It shows a large ship under full sail on the [illegible] In a beautiful group of figures [illegible] and carrying in her hand the torch. The whole is expressive of the departure from home of thousands of emigrants [illegible] and the [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] Bela Pratt, the [illegible] sculptor, is the [illegible] assistance [illegible] and [illegible] assignment [illegible] the [illegible] necessary fund and get to work immediately on the structure.

Will Push the Work.

Rapid work will be required to raise the immense structure in the few weeks remaining before Old Home Week, but that has already been carried out to the [illegible]

Just as soon as the fund is assured the models now in course of construction will be divided up among a big force of workmen and [illegible] progress [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Mary Duncan, the negro servant, was held in $500 on a technical charge of receiving stolen property, to abide the appearance of the grand jury in early June.

Runyan, the former paying bank clerk, showed no emotion when he was taken in the magistrate's room by the detectives. Mrs. Carter was very much affected.

Mrs. Carter Not Nervous.

Mrs. Carter was not at all nervous, and, after glancing at the crowd, covered her head and walked with the detectives. The prisoners left the Tombs in patrol wagons and were driven to Supreme Court. Here they were arraigned before Justice Gaynor. Another warrant was issued charging them with the theft of $7,000 in cash. The prisoners were taken back to the Tombs in a way that they escaped notice.

That's the way we feel. Like saying "thank you" to every one of our customers. We never knew before that we had quite so many friends. For a week before the 4th, nights were turned into days at our place. We had to do it to keep up with the orders that poured in on us from all parts of New England. But every order was shipped, and we haven't heard of a single disappointed customer. It was the biggest 4th of July business we ever had and again we say Thank You.

Talks on Teeth

By G. GORDON MARTIN
(INCORPORATED)

NATURAL LOOKING TEETH

Artificial teeth that don't look and feel natural are a failure.

We study the question of naturalness in all its phases when restoring teeth by our ALVEOLAR METHOD (teeth without plates), and as a result our work is hard to distinguish from nature's. It is natural in looks, color, shape, size and setting.

The average dentist buys artificial teeth by the card, like pins or buttons, and then comes as close to matching up as these artificial teeth will allow, and that isn't very close in most cases.

You can spot the artificial teeth every time, can't you?

The teeth we use are made to our order. Each one is a tooth, and must match those left in the patient's mouth EXACTLY, not alone in color, but in shape, size and position in the mouth.

We exercise the greatest amount of care in all of the work we do, and especially in the matter of teeth restoration.

This is one of the secrets of our great success and explains why today we do the largest dental business in the world.

We are not satisfied to simply supply "false" teeth. They must be as near nature's teeth as we can make them.

As a consequence of all this care our patients are able to articulate with clean-cut distinctness as well as masticate their food perfectly.

We are specialists in dental science, and no man dare lay claim to that term who is not an expert, or who has not mastered his chosen profession.

So, in coming to us you are coming to specialists who will treat your case according to its special needs.

You are sure of expert service there, no matter what you may need done to your teeth.

And the charges are no more—not so much in most cases—than are asked by other first-class practitioners who may do as good work as is done here, but who cannot do the one great work, i. e., restore teeth by the Alveolar method, without using plates or ordinary bridge work.

We have been granted patents on this method by this government and by the governments of six of the foreign countries.

Don't experiment with YOUR teeth.

Our careful examination and consultation is free.

If you have two or more teeth in either jaw we can restore all the rest of the teeth which have been lost to you, and these will be artificial in name only. For all purposes they will be equal to those that nature provided you with.

Dr. Martin's book, Alveolar Dentistry, is a text book on teeth. We send it free to all who write for it. Worth its weight in gold to those with teeth troubles.

Why not send for it now, today.

HUNT FIREBUG FOR CAMBRIDGE BLAZES

BARN BURNS TO GROUND

The destruction of a barn, directly opposite the Broadway Baptist Church, on Columbia street, Cambridge, last evening, leads the police to believe that a firebug is working in the vicinity, since it is the fourth fire within the past two days, the origin of which is shrouded in mystery.

The other three fires were in the vestry of the Broadway Church, and to edifice was damaged to extent of $5,000. The police have been investigating these fires, but have found no clue to the incendiary.

The barn destroyed yesterday is owned by John L. Morrin of Arlington and has been used by Levi Fairbanks, a Cambridge grocer. While M. H. Earle was passing the stable early last evening, he saw flames leaping from one of the windows. He sounded an alarm and succeeded in rescuing the one horse which was stalled in the barn.

By the time that the department arrived, the two and one-half story wooden structure was a mass of flames, and the department confined its efforts to holding the fire in check. The building with its contents was completely gutted and the loss is estimated at about $1,500. The fire started under a stairway and had gained great headway before it was discovered.

MENU WAS ONLY FLOUR AND BEANS

Dawson, July 6.—Flour and beans are about all there is left in the Duncan and Mayo district to keep the people of that locality alive until the first boat reaches there. W. K. Edwards, the first man to reach Dawson since the river broke, got in on a raft and brought the news. He has been working on No. 1 below Duncan all Winter. Edwards says:

"The fifty people of the camp have scarcely more than enough to eat. They are entirely out of bacon, lard, milk, cream, butter, sugar and other articles which we have been enjoying as a matter of luxuries.

"The steamer Lafrance, which the White Pass has en route from Labergs, is expected daily, and will be dispatched to Duncan immediately on her arrival with supplies, mail and passengers.

Jim Phillips, of the Stewart River Trading Company, which has the store in the Duncan district, is expected to arrive in a short time from Mayo. He will come down in a small boat. Edwards, on his trip to Dawson, walked to McQuesten and then took to the raft. On the journey he shot two black bears and one cinnamon grizzly. He brought one of the black bears to Dawson, but the others were too large to handle.

PARAGON'S SCINTILLATING DISPLAY FASCINATES ALL

The "Park de Luxe" at Nantasket Beach Continues a Mecca for Pleasure Seekers.

After a brief respite from the immense crowds on Independence Day, the management and attaches of Paragon Park are looking forward to another large gathering to-day.

Yesterday afternoon and last night brought many visitors to this "Park de Luxe," as it is appropriately styled. People down to Nantasket for the week-end enjoyed a visit to the park, while the Summer residents furnished their regular quota of evening guests. The hot, sultry weather of the afternoon changed to a cooler atmosphere by night, so that all places in the park were delightfully comfortable.

The various shows and concessions were well patronized last evening, and look for an equally encouraging attendance today. There is probably no more beautiful electric display in this vicinity than the one furnished when Paragon Park is fully lighted at night. With the tall tower as a focussing point, the broad extent of the Park is a scintillating expanse of incandescence, whose gleam shines far out over the ocean on either side.

Under this wealth of illumination there is an ever-changing atmosphere of life and gaiety. People come and go in and out of the various attractions. They go down the bamboo slide with reckless abandon. They take the swift whirl through the chutes. They gather about the central court and listen to the band concert and watch the free open-air show.

The band instrument has had an exceptionally splendid fill during the past week, so much so that Manager Dodge announces that it is to be continued another week. Speedy, the champion high diver, Chrisie in his Death-Trap Loop, the Norins in their fire dive, and Barton's Dog and Pony Circus are star features in the program.

ADOPT 8-HOUR DAY.

Lisbon Falls, Me., July 6.—Beginning Monday, the Lisbon Falls Fibre Company will adopt the eight-hour schedule. This will affect a large number of men and is considered a victory for labor.

Brave Little Girl, Trying to Support Family, Sends Appeal to Absent Father

MAMMA IS DEAD

Missing Parent, She Says, Is an Artist.

A human document, in the few lines of which is contained the story of a family made destitute by the absence of a father —its head—came to the Boston Sunday American yesterday from a sixteen-year-old girl who lives in Riverside, R. I.

The girl's own story is the best way of telling the story. Her letter reads as follows:

Girl's Letter.

"Our mother died on April 12, 1906, and our father, after being away for seven years without even writing to us in all that time, came home from Michigan and made a home for us.

"This was in Sterling, R. I.

"Father was very kind to us, and we were happy in our little home. After mamma died we were nearly alone until our father came.

"One day in the latter part of September, 1906, my father started for work as usual and never came back. He left us all alone and we have never heard from him since.

"Will you publish in the Boston Sunday American the picture of him which we enclose?

"There are five children now left alone. The oldest one, now eighteen, married and went to Indiana last Summer. He left us all alone and we have never heard from him since.

"Will you publish in the Boston Sunday American the picture of him which we enclose?

"There are five children now left alone. The oldest one, now eighteen, married and went to Indiana last Summer. He left us all alone and we have never heard from him since.

"We thought we had a good home. Next comes me, Sadie, aged sixteen. Then Etta, aged fourteen; Jennie, aged eleven, and Clarence, aged ten.

"My sister Jennie is with a lady in Massachusetts, but Etta, Clarence and I are living with an uncle, who is not in a good position to keep us, which makes it very hard.

"I am working in Providence, R. I., but do not get enough wages to care for my brother and sister. My father is an artist and has painted in oil and water colors in this country and others.

Missing Man Is Fifty.

"He is fifty years old, 5 feet 11 inches tall and has light hair and a light mustache. Sometimes he is called Frank or Tom Truehart. His name is Daniel F. Austin. Respectfully,

"SADIE AUSTIN."

If this chances to fall under the eye of Daniel F. Austin it will show him how much he is missed at home.

The brave little sixteen-year-old girl who is acting as mother and father to the younger children deserves admiration and help doesn't she?

GRAND JURY INDICTS MANY IN SECRET

94 CASES ARE DISPOSED

Neither upon the list of true bills returned yesterday nor upon the list of "no bills" appeared the names of any of the men who have figured in the investigation of alleged cruelty to prisoners at Deer Island.

The investigation of charges of abuse of prisoners and of conditions generally at Deer Island, which lasted for three days before sufficient evidence for presentation to the grand jury was secured, were brought before the District Attorney Moran in the face of much opposition from Mayor Fitzgerald and the officials at City Hall. When charges were first made against various officials of the Island prison and it was announced that the grand jury would take the matter up, Mayor Fitzgerald suddenly stepped in and removed the master of the house of correction, James R. Gerrish, from office. When the mayor deposed Mr. Gerrish, he also removed Deputy Perkins. Charges against Perkins have been investigated by this grand jury.

When Gerrish left the Island Ex-Police Captain Frederick G. Hoffman, an appointee of the Mayor, took his place, and is now in charge of the prison.

Both Mr. Gerrish and Mr. Perkins since their removal have charged that they have lost their positions because they opposed the Mayor in his attempts to make the prison one of his political assets.

Alleged violations of the eight-hour law in the city park department were considered by the grand jury. The names of some of the men involved appear in the list of true bills or no bills.

Seventy-eight indictments were returned by the grand jury when it reported yesterday. Sixteen "no bills" were reported.

HUMAN TORCH RUNS THROUGH STREETS

His clothing saturated with oil from a leaking torch, Francis Govert, a lamplighter, caught fire while igniting a gasolene lamp at Pierce avenue and Butler street, Milton Lower Falls, and he ran through the streets a veritable human torch, screaming with pain. Although his outcries attracted a large crowd, no one attempted to assist him and he was badly burned before he succeeded in shedding the burning garments and quenching the flames. He was removed to his home, No. 808 River street, after treatment by a physician.

HELD FOR N. Y. POLICE.

HENRY SIEGEL DAY AT WONDERLAND

Yesterday was Henry Siegel Day at Wonderland, and the hundreds of employes of the big store had a merry time of it. Immediately on the closing of the store at 1 p. m. the men and women, who had worked hard and faithfully all week, made a rush for the big amusement park at Revere Beach. Two tickets had been provided for every employe of the Siegel Company, so that wives and sweethearts could be taken along, which added greatly to the pleasure of a memorable day.

The fun was kept up until a late hour last night, and the many amusement features of this great resort were crowded every minute with the fun-seekers, who wasted not one fleeting second in their pursuit of pleasure.

SLAY ORGANIZER OF JEWISH MASSACRES

Ekaterinburg, Russia, July 6.—Captain Pushkin, the chief organizer of the revolutionists assert, of many of the recent massacres of Russian Jews and Liberals, was assassinated to-day.

WASHINGTON MAY INSPECT ICE PLANTS

Existing Conditions Reported as Alarming as Old Packing House Abuses.

Washington, July 6.—Federal inspections of ice plants doing an interstate business may be the next step taken by the government. Disclosures of shocking unsanitary conditions in certain ice plants in the district have aroused the apprehensions of the Marine Hospital Service that a condition exists throughout the country similar to packing house abuses.

The discovery of indescribably filthy conditions here was made during an investigation by a corps of experts into the milk business. The report which has been laid before the President contains some references to practices not fit for print.

BRITAIN AT MERCY OF GRAFT FRAUDS

Auditors Expose Rank Steals by Contractors Supplying Army and Navy.

London, July 6.—That graft is rampant in many branches of the British public service is strongly hinted in a report just made public by the committee of public accounts.

Without making direct charges of dishonesty, the report sets forth a long list of instances in which it is implied that the government has lost heavily through sharp practices by public servants and contractors.

One case is that of the Ayrshire Foundry Company, which is accused of furnishing defective castings to the admiralty for the King Edward VII. and other ships. The concern having failed, no way exists of recovering the sums lost.

Reference is made to a Portsmouth general dealer who killed himself when accused by the committee of keeping his stock of cartridges supplied by the pilfering of employes on the government ranges.

Secret commissions, it is asserted, have been paid by contractors for postal clothing and other supplies for the army and the navy.

At another place it was discovered that water for the manufacture of ice was taken from wells in a narrow yard between the stable and factory.

B. F. KEITH RECEIVES CONGRATULATIONS

Yesterday marked the twenty-second anniversary of the inauguration of continuous vaudeville. B. F. Keith, on July 6, 1885, began, on a comparatively unimportant scale, the enterprise which has culminated in the great film in one of the most gigantic interests in this country. With a third section added to the "production," Mr. Keith started his career in a small store where the Adams House now stands. Mr. Keith was the recipient yesterday of many congratulations and wishes for continued prosperity.
